MOTION PICTURE HERALD

KEEPING THE FAITH

If through all his days a man in business tells the truth as he sees it, keeps his word as he gives it, works for his industry for its own sake along with his, he gets what is known as a good reputation.

It is like that, too, with journals of business. Publications that matter have many of the attributes of personality.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD is happy in the consciousness of, and responsibility to, a good name.

for 1937 and all the years to come.

"MAKING GOOD"

THE naivete of the marginal fringe of hopeful uplifters with reference to the motion picture is an unending joy, when it is not an irritation. Consider the profound forecast of Boyd B. Rakestraw, assistant director of the University of California Extension division, speaking before the Berkeley Motion Picture Research Council:

"Ultimately the standards of the motion picture will be raised by the raising of the general level of public taste."

It certainly is going to look nice when he gets it fixed up.

IT is Mr. Rakestraw's anticipation that the presentation of selected and educational pictures in the schools will create standards and establish criteria and that by the students the whole public in turn will be infected.

The scheme diagrams nicely on paper or the rostrum, but one inevitably calls to mind the many and vociferous assertions of late, from educators of status, that broadly American education is failing to transmit culture and essences of the spirit to its students, that our colleges and universities have become, to some, institutions of vocational training, trade schools, and to the majority a prolonged, dependent adolescence and playtime.

So much of this pother about pictures would assign to the screen a mass job for civilization, a silly hope of this technological age which wants a machine to do for the masses that which can be achieved only by the individual, motivated from within. Culture and taste are intimately individual concerns. Men are civilized one at a time, because it involves processes of thought. Thinking is a one man job. Masses have only emotions. The multitude, the mob, can do nothing positive but go wild again. The easy, automatic way is mostly downhill.

IT is a fair contention that the cultural standards of the motion picture, modest as they are, are for the average of the whole product probably quite a little higher than for the average output of the other media. The best that the motion picture dares is far indeed from the higher attainments of the arts which may serve the few, but rarely these days can the screen be found at the low levels that so pull down the averages for the printed page, or among the preponderating inanities of the radio.

The cultural force of the motion picture as it is today compares favourably with the expressions that come in terms of product from such centers as Grand Rapids and Detroit, from the presses of New York and Chicago.

IN evidence that this is not the professionally prejudiced contention of an internal defender of the motion picture cause, some citations are ready to hand. In the New York Herald Tribune Mr. Howard Barnes, who has for several years divided his attentions between the cinema and the stage, remarks of Hollywood, ". . . . you must admit it has offered its customers a good deal more for their money than has the drama. . . . I am hopeful that this state of affairs will at least jog confirmed movie detractors out of their smug condescension. . . ."

And, further, it is recorded that the other afternoon Dr. Erwin Patofsky, member of the Institute for advanced Study at Princeton University, remarked that the motion picture is today almost the "only art actually alive." If poets and painters were compelled by law to stop producing, he said, few would know it and few would care. "But if the movies were stopped by law there would be a revolution in a week."

There's a pipeful for the Research Councils.

INCIDENTALLY, since more than a decade ago when the editor of this page began to assert in the public prints that the motion picture was in truth the superseding art, born of the long evolution of methods of recreation of events, he incurred considerable scornful comment, it is now pleasant at the end of 1936 to find some support in academic quarters.

The motion picture is fulfilling its destiny with a rate of development without parallel in all the history of all the arts.

In the widespread graphic portrayal of sheer beauty the motion picture's performance is without a close competitor, a result of the compression of the art into the control of a guild of picture makers striving with each other and serving inevitably first their own experienced tastes.

The motion picture is doing its part, is entirely capable of its own research and has demonstrated a capacity for tending to its own business. Once again those who want to do something about it are advised to get a camera and start from there.

THE first recorded direct relation between the growing field of amateur motion picture makers and the professional theatre screen seems to be at hand in the "Liberty-Pete Smith amateur movie contests" announced in Liberty magazine of December 26, contemplating promotion of and maybe contributions to the flow of Mr. Smith's shorts for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. On the screen the promotion opens with a bonafide amateur component of the release entitled "Wanted—A Master," originally made in 16 mm. film by two lads of twenty. Other amateur endeavors will be presented—if they pass Mr. Smith. Unlike all the older arts, the motion picture has thus far had substantially nothing of an amateur background to draw upon. It may yet evolve.

This Week

Finances and Profits

The motion picture industry concludes the year 1936 operating at substantial profits. Grosses for the year are estimated by press services to be $250,000,000 greater than for 1935 and theatre attendance an average of 10,000,000 a week greater. The same sources estimate that approximately one billion dollars was spent for motion picture entertainment by the public during the year. Reflecting this, stocks of the major companies appreciated $162,636,250 in market value in 1936.

Facts and figures are on page 15.

Admissions Up

Admission prices have been increased in five significant situations in the east, south and middle west, continuing a trend which began last summer. The advances are small but are being watched with interest for their possible effect.

See page 16.

Congress and Films

Observers in Washington now believe that no definite "reform" drive will be directed against the motion picture industry in the coming session of Congress. It is expected that copyright and block booking bills, the old favorites, will be the only measures aimed directly at the industry to be introduced. The industry, however, is concerned over a proposal by Congressman Patman for a bill prohibiting producers and manufacturers from engaging in retail business. The bill would have a special section bringing motion pictures under its jurisdiction.

A Washington story is on page 17.

Holiday Tempo

Hollywood studios took appropriate recess for holiday observance but continued to place new product before the cameras in unslowed succession. Completion of pictures in work progressed less favorably.

Gus McCarthy's weekly listing of pictures and personnel on page 63.

Cowdin to Report

J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board of Universal Pictures Company, left New York for England this week on the Normandie to confer with his British associates in the organization and to report to them the progress of both the production and distribution forces since their acquisition by the Standard Capital group. Mr. Cowdin also will discuss the release of Universal product in Great Britain and on the Continent.

Details are found on page 30.

Musicians Win

The musician's union in Philadelphia has effected an agreement with Warner Brothers circuit under which 100 more men will be employed in theatres there. The agreement followed a campaign for live entertainment in motion picture houses conducted by the union which lasted for three months. Under the pact the circuit agrees to spend $176,500 next year for music in its Philadelphia houses.

Details are on page 30.

Bank Night Arrests

Police Commissioner Allman in Chicago, who last week warned theatre managers to discontinue using Bank Night and other giveaways under the threat of arrest, carried out his threats when his officers raided theaters all over the city and arrested 15 managers as violators of the Illinois lottery laws. They were all released on bail pending a hearing January 15th. In eight other cities moves were launched to stop the practice of giving away monetary prizes in theatres, as one community approved it and infringement actions concerned another.

Details of the developments throughout the country are found on page 31.

Better Than the Worst

Mexican exhibitors and motion picture men generally, are in favor of the new government censorship, believing that the establishment of the central board will eliminate much of the trouble arising from overlapping state and local boards.

Principles to be followed by the board are outlined on page 98.

Britons and Quota

The British motion picture industry now is confident there are no grounds for fearing that an amending Cinematograph Films Act will be introduced at once by the Cabinet recommending the so-called Moyne Report's proposals of a Government Commission to control the business and of a 50 per cent Quota. Indeed, Wardour Street believes such an amendment is unlikely in any session.

Further developments on the controversial Moyne matter are discussed on page 73.

Shanghai Problem

Unrest in Shanghai, with Japanese marines, bayonets fixed, patrolling the streets, has made severe inroads into the business of the cinemas. One foreign exhibitor estimated attendance at 50 per cent of normal in the northern or Hongkew district.

Details are on page 29.

Coalition in Japan

Consummation of an agreement between two large film interests in Japan, the Nikkatsu and Takarazuka companies, has resulted in dividing Japanese film distribution into two groups, one the Toho-J. O. Studio-PCL-Nikkatsu, the other the Shochiku and Shinko companies.

Other new developments in Japan are recorded on page 32.

Zukor Jubilee

Motivation

"Considering the career of the man Zukor it becomes conspicuous that his dominant motivation seems ever to have been a conviction that tomorrow would be better. He enjoyed the tremendous advantage of starting with an industry for which any way that it went from where it was up."

From Terry Ramsaye's appreciation on Adolph Zukor's 25th anniversary in motion picture production, page 19.

The "Elizabethan" Era

The selling of "Queen Elizabeth" was notable not only because the production was the first feature length production handled by Adolph Zukor but also because it introduced mass distribution, when it was made evident that successful selling required that there be a number of pictures to sell, says Al Lichtman, reminiscing on the days when he was general manager of distribution for Famous Players Film Company.

Mr. Lichtman's comments on the early days of distribution appear on page 57.

Anniversary Dinner

An impressive group of motion picture figures including representatives of every branch of the industry will be present at the Paramount Studio Club dinner on January 7th in honor of the Silver Jubilee of Adolph Zukor. The banquet, on the veteran producer's 64th birthday, will signal the opening of the Jubilee celebration.

Names of a few of those who will be present at the dinner and a list of exhibitors who will receive Jubilee medallions are on page 59.

"Queen Elizabeth"

Concurrent with a preview of "Queen Elizabeth," Adolph Zukor, head of Famous Players Film Company, predicts that feature length motion pictures have come to stay. So says Gus McCarthy, seeing anew a print of the Sarah Bernhardt vehicle and reviewing it in terms of the status of the industry as of 25 years ago.

Mr. McCarthy's review and comment are on page 60.

Interludes

Zukor-iana is filled with probably more anecdotes than those pertaining to any other of the motion picture's pioneers. Paramount's president was once called "Creepy," because he was so quiet. And while the present Silver Jubilee is his 25th anniversary as head of Paramount Pictures, growing out of Famous Players, it's really his 31st anniversary in the motion picture business.

Asides and Interludes on the Silver Jubilee appear on page 61.

Qualified

Statements to the effect that Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has put a ban on the distribution of British pictures in the United States are entirely erroneous, Sidney R. Kent, president, said Wednesday.

"We have not put a ban on anybody," Mr. Kent said. "Our agreement with Gaumont British made three years ago called for the use of our exchanges throughout the country for the distribution of their pictures only. Our facilities will not permit us to distribute additional outside pictures which GB now wishes to distribute."

Ostrers Stay

Isidore and Maurice Ostrers, scheduled to sail for London last Saturday, cancelled their reservations at the last minute and decided to remain in America for several weeks "for personal reasons." Little possibility is seen of any further conferences with the Schenck brothers, however. Maurice Ostrer and Arthur Lee, New York GB executive, left New York for a month's stay at Miami.

Their movements are reported on page 30.

Erpi Financing

Details of the arrangement under which Electrical Research Products, Inc., provided $2,000,000 of the $5,500,000 with which Standard Capital Company purchased Universal last spring were disclosed at Federal Communications Commission hearings this week. The inquiry is part of the FCC study of the operations of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. The deal and other Erpi motion picture financing were detailed on the stand by Whitford Drake, executive vice-president of Erpi.

The testimony is reported on page 72.

Headlines

Outstanding in the motion picture news of the year just concluded was the rising index of prosperity reflected from increased grosses consequent improved financial statements. Self-regulation expressed through the acceptance of a trade practice program, reorganization of Paramount and RKO; the Gaumont British, Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew deal, and many changes in personnel are other headlines which loom large in a review of the year.

The headlines, by dates, are listed on page 77.

Tay Garnett Reports

Slangily and feelingly criticizing sales heads of American distribution organizations for what he considers a myopic view of the foreign market, Tay Garnett reports this week on trade observations made during his recent world cruise.

Mr. Garnett's remarks are quoted directly on page 63.

Unit System

Republic Pictures in the next three weeks will drop mass production for the unit system idea with six to seven producers scheduled to turn out the company's annual program, it was revealed in New York Wednesday. Nat Levine, production head, will personally produce from seven to eight pictures a year under the new system.

Four producers, who are not affiliated with the company at present, have been sounded out and are expected to join Republic. Two others will be added before an official announcement will be made. Each producer, with the exception of Mr. Levine, will be responsible for four to five pictures a year.

Show Goes On

A loss of approximately $15,000 was suffered by Newark theatres as a result of the power failure on December 28 which left the city in darkness for five and a half hours. The power lapse was reported to have been caused by a fire in the Public Service Gas and Electric Company's Essex station.

Following the tradition of "The show must go on," impromptu stage shows were organized with the aid of flashlights in some theatres, with the audiences participating and in other community sings were conducted. It was estimated that audiences in downtown theatres alone totaled more than 10,000 persons. All were given readmission tickets or their money back, with a majority choosing the tickets. There was no panic or disorder reported in any of the theatres.

Electric Sales

Edgar S. Bloom, president of the Western Electric Company, announced Wednesday that sales for 1936 will exceed $140,000,000, as compared to $105,417,000 for 1935. The volume of orders now on hand also points to a continued increase in sales during 1937, he said.

Mr. Bloom expressed gratification that as a result of this activity it has been possible to re-employ a large number of former employees. Additions to the force in 1936 amounted to more than 11,800 to bring the total in employ of the company at the close of the year to about 33,000.

Merger Abandoned

Efforts to merge the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the Independent Theatre Owners Association in New York have been abandoned and the committees appointed by each organization to study the amalgamation have been disbanded. The reason given for the dropping of the plan was that the committees could not agree on terms.

NEW FILM SLATED. Edward G. Robinson back in New York after a vacation in Europe. His next picture will be Warners' "Sir Galahad," which he is scheduled to begin soon.

Look At It from Any Angle

What we say is within reason—ten of them—because the page is too short for the thousand that suggest themselves!

1. SARAH BERNHARDT has never in all her phenomenal career, achieved, and will never again equal or approach, the triumph she has attained in her latest and perhaps last Photo Pantomime.

"QUEEN ELIZABETH"

2. Without SARAH BERNHARDT the pathetic story of Queen Elizabeth's fatal, futile love would have been a sensational masterpiece.

3. WITH SARAH BERNHARDT it is an immortal epic of human frailty and futility.

4. The photographic perfection of the production makes the three reels that comprise it a series of moving paintings.

5. The English Government surrendered priceless documents, the original notes and orders of Queen Elizabeth, including the death warrant of Lord Essex, in signing which she signed her own, from the British Museum to provide the last convincing detail in a thrillingly realistic production, and the dresses, armor, furniture and buildings are faithful reproductions the originals of the Elizabethan period.

6. The enormous cost of production is too apparent to be mentioned.

7. The germ of genius and the throb and sob of humanity thrill throughout the film.

8. Artistically tinted and toned, the production can veritably and meritably be called a half mile of Rembrandt.

9. We have underestimated, rather than exaggerated, the importance and value of the production.

PUBLIX THEATRES, INC., is the name under which the amalgamated Famous Players and Balaban and Katz houses will function in the future. Incorporation papers have been filed in Albany in that name, with Sam Katz as president.

The newly organized corporation has signed a long term contract with John Murray Anderson as director of productions. Productions include the elaborate presentation acts which are becoming more and more a special feature of motion picture torium. The theatre will close at midnight, Saturday, Dec. 19th, for five days to allow completion of the construction work and will reopen Christmas day with an entirely new type of entertainment, something never seen before in New York.

The birth of Publix, far-reaching culmination of the extension of the Zukor producing-distributing organization into Exhibition. The headlines reproduced above told the story in November 1925, and the following year the Zukor enterprises established home offices in a great new building that also housed their own Broadway theatre. At right Mr. Zukor is shown with Mrs. Zukor at the opening.

HIGHER GROSSES, EARNINGS PRESAGE GREAT YEAR AHEAD

Film Shares Gain $162,636,250 on New York Exchange as Steady Recovery Turns to Quicker Stride

by THE ANALYST

The motion picture turns the new year operating at substantial profits in all phases.

Industry grosses are reported by United Press to be $250,000,000 greater than the previous year.

Theatre attendance is estimated to be running at 81,000,000 average weekly, up 10,000,000 from the 71,000,000 weekly average in 1935 and the low weekly average of 54,000,000 in 1933.

Practically every studio in Hollywood is building additional structures and re-equipping its mechanical departments, the first important move of its kind in five years.

Reports received this week from Loew's, RKO and Warner Brothers indicate that box office admissions now are running 20 per cent ahead of the same holiday period of 1935.

News wire services estimate that approximately one billion dollars has been poured into motion picture entertainment by the public during the year, a top figure for the last five years.

Scores of large and small companies in the pre-Christmas week paid bonuses to their employees, another half-decade precedent.

Motion picture shares on the New York Stock Exchange gained $162,636,250 in market value during 1936 on a wave of prosperity that swept the industry and the country and promised further advances in the new year.

With film earnings definitely "in the black" for the first time since the late depression, the market value of listed picture stocks increased for the fourth consecutive year, totaling $829,456,250, as of the close on December 28. This compared with $666,820,000 at the end of 1935 and $402,973,125 at the close of 1934.

Net gains, in points, ranged from ½ to 80 in the film shares as Wall Street traders, aware that a large portion of the increased national income will jingle in box office cash registers, reached avidly for the industry's stocks.

Film Business Leads

The film business was in the van of the forward movement that took place along the whole line of the nation's industry during 1936 and its stocks reflected the bright picture presented by such major business indices as heavily increased steel production, electricity output, freight carloadings, auto sales, retail trade and renewed demand for jewels, furs and other luxuries.

How motion picture securities responded to the broadening recovery movement in recording the best prices since the trough of the general business depression is shown in the tables on the opposite page, reflecting appreciations on the New York stock, bond and curb markets.

Returning prosperity was accelerated after the election and the subsequent surge of wage increases and dividend and bonus disbursements. In the two weeks following the election motion picture stocks soared $82,172,500 in market value.

Meanwhile, the steady recovery that the industry had felt since the beginning of the year took on a swift stride. Distributors reported net earnings touching pre-depression levels. A rise at box offices everywhere was shown in exhibitors reports. The industry joined general business in pouring out dividends and bonuses.

Eastman Dividends

Eastman Kodak started the ball rolling with a $5,175,000 dividend, declaring a special divident of 75 cents a share on the common in addition to the usual 25 cent extra and the regular quarterly of $1.25. The company further approved a wage dividend of $2,220,000 to be distributed March 1, 1937.

Loew's earnings report for the year ended August 31, showing net income of $11,076,823, against $7,579,744 in the preceding ficcal year, enabled the company to dig down for $1,600,000 to distribute an extra $1 dividend early in December, in addition to the regular quarterly of 50 cents, which brought the total disbursement to $2,400,000. It was announced at Los Angeles that MGM, Loew subsidiary, will spend about $2,000,000 on new studio construction.

Twentieth Century-Fox declared a dividend of $1 a share on common, representing disbursement of $1,600,000 on listed shares, and announced a $500,000 Christmas bonus for all lower pay ranks at the studios and in sales and distribution forces throughout the world.

"The most profitable year in our history enables the distribution to be made," said President S. R. Kent.

Paramount's Share

Paramount had a prominent spot in the returning prosperity picture. The company declared a dividend of $12 a share on the $6 preferred stock and an initial dividend of 60 cents a share on the $10 par 6 per cent preferred stock, both representing an outlay of approximately $3,390,000. Furthermore, Paramount paid a bonus of one week's salary to all employees of the home office and the exchange in the United States and Canada with salaries of $40 weekly or less.

Commenting on Paramount's progress since its reorganization, the Wall Street Journal early in November said the company might earn more than $4,000,000 for for the last six months of 1936, of which more than $1,500,000 was expected to be shown for the September quarter.

Technicolor responded to the recovery urge by starting dividends on the stock with an initial payment of 50 cents a share. The company's net sales for 1936 were estimated by the Los Angeles Times at $2,200,000, against $1,499,845 in 1935. Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, a subsidiary, distributed a bonus of one or two weeks salary, depending on length of service, to all employed for three months or longer.

Billion Gross Estimated

A special dividend of 5 cents a share by Trans-Lux and a stock dividend by Pathe Film, consisting of Grand National stock and declared soon after organization of the latter company, swelled the dividend and bonus sum handed out by the industry another half million dollars.

The United Press, in a copyrighted dispatch from the Coast, said motion picture production enters 1937 on the crest of a wave of prosperity that has poured approximately a billion dollars in gross receipts into the industry during the past year.

The industry, according to the news service, grossed about $250,000,000 more in 1936 than in 1935, highest for the last five years and one of the best in film history. Theatre attendance rose in 1936 to a weekly average of 81,000,000, United Press estimated close to an all-time record and comparing with the 1935 weekly average attendance of 71,000,000 and a weekly average of only 54,000,000 in 1933.

All Industries Contributing

Meanwhile, outlook for continuance of the general business improvement in which films have played such a large part was enhanced by the annual report to Congress of Secretary of Commerce, Daniel C. Roper.

All major industries are contributing to the recovery movement, Mr. Roper reported, and the indicated national income of at least $60,000,000 for 1936 probably will equal income paid out for the first time since 1929.

With business as a whole "out of the red," the secretary reported, three significant features stand out: They are a substantial increase in production of durable goods, increase in nondurable goods production and the fact that the forward movement, in progress for the past three fiscal years, has not been checked by an important setback at any time.

ADMISSIONS RAISED IN FIVE MORE CITIES

And New Pictures Continue to Break House Records Despite the Holiday Season

Continuing a countrywide trend, latest developments show admission prices have been increased in five significant situations in the east, middle west and south. In only one city, Omaha, have advances been dropped as not feasible at present.

In what may be the start of a general upturn for theatre admissions in New England, the Metropolitan in Boston has advanced its evening price 10 cents to 75 cents.

Elimination of matinee scales and increases in Sunday admission prices, adopted recently by all South Philadelphia theatres, completes an increased admission move throughout the city. Similar action was taken earlier in other sections of the city. With evening prices going into effect at 2 p.m. now, prevailing admissions are 20 and 25 cents, instead of the former 15 cents in the afternoon. Sunday admissions are 25 and 30 cents, instead of the former 20 and 25 cents.

The newest move in Detroit is by the United Detroit circuit at the Fisher and Riviera theatres, where night prices for balcony seats have been advanced from 25 to 30 cents. Other houses are expected to follow.

The price scale at the Varsity in Lincoln, Neb., has been increased 10 cents to 35 cents for orchestra seats in the evening. The move is being watched with interest by other operators.

The Park theatre in Tampa, Fla., a Sparks house, has increased admissions five cents for matinees and evenings, the first price increase in the territory in several years.

Tri-States Drops Adavnce

The Tri-States circuit has abandoned its attempt to keep the recently reopened 2,900 seat Paramount in Omaha at a 55 cent top and has reduced prices to 25 cents to 6 P.M. and 40 cents at night. The single feature policy continues. The Omaha and Orpheum, other Tri-States houses, and the Brandeis, operated by Will Singer, have announced that the 25 cent matinee price will discontinue at 6 P.M. instead of 6:30. The Omaha advanced its top from 40 to 55 cents for the preview of "The Plainsman."

A new low in admissions was established at Plymouth, Ohio, when Ed E. Ramsey charged five cents for adults and children at the Plymouth theatre during Christmas week.

More Attendance Records

The new pictures continue to break house records according to announcements from the home office publicity departments.

Columbia's "Pennies from Heaven" broke the house record for the first three days of its engagement at the Paramount theatre in Hollywood, grossing $12,193 for Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

"Rainbow on the River" exceeded all records for pre-Christmas business at the Radio City Music Hall, according to the RKO offices. The picture was extended for a week and did the largest holiday business in the history of theatre over the Christmas weekend.

For its opening two days at the Roxy, New York, the 20th Century-Fox quintuplet feature, "Reunion," drew a record attendance of 47,214.

"Three Men on a Horse" broke the all time record at the New York Strand for Thanksgiving Day business, it was announced by Warner Brothers. The picture did similar business in its other openings.

Samuel Goldwyn's "Come and Get It" recorded the highest gross for the first four days in the last five years in the history of Harry Huggman's Denver theatre. The picture also broke a weekend record at the Roosevelt in Chicago where it tallied $8,200 for Saturday and Sunday.

By playing to 9,312 admissions before 1 o'clock on the Sunday following Christmas the New York Paramount theatre set a new all time morning attendance record. The picture, "College Holiday," was held over for a second week.

Union Agreement Is Reached at Meeting

A satisfactory settlement of previously controversial points in the union agreement to merge Local 306, Operators' Union, the Allied Union and the Independent Theatre Owners Association, has been reached in New York following a second meeting of the parties involved, with the survey board appointed by Mayor La Guardia to arrange a settlement of the multiple union situation. The final agreement is now being drafted by attorneys for the two unions and the theatre group.

The original basis of the agreement was for the absorption of Allied by Local 306, with a salary increase for present Allied members who are employed in theatres belonging to members of the ITOA. It is expected that the agreement will be completed in its final form and signed within a short time.

Only One New Theatre Planned Abroad: Loew

Loew's, Inc., has no immediate plans to build or acquire theatres abroad with the exception of the construction of a house in Amsterdam, Holland, it was said Monday by Arthur Loew, head of the company's foreign department, upon his arrival in New York from a three-months trip to England, France, Italy, Switzerland and Holland.

The site for the Amsterdam project was purchased while Mr. Loew was in Holland and details of construction will be completed shortly. The executive viewed reports from abroad about the company's building in England as unfounded. He could also give no information about Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's producing plans there.

the broadening recovery movement. With exception of shares of one or two companies, which reacted to individual situations, the gains were universal and marked the best post-depression prices for the stocks.

Most marked was the appreciation in Paramount stocks, the first preferred, on which a $12 dividend was declared, soaring 80 points to a price of 158, a move that added $20,000,000 to its market value. Paramount common gained $19,800,000 in market value, rising from a close of 10¼ at the end of 1935 to around 23.

Eastman Kodak, "blue chip" of the film group on the stock exchange, climbed more than 15 points to above 170 for a market valuation gain of $36,512,500. Warner Brothers, a market leader in activity in many of the bull movement sessions that followed the election, rose to a valuation of $65,325,000 from $38,512,500 at the end of 1935.

Other Increases

Loew's was bid up 11 points, net, during the year, and gained $17,600,000 in market value, while Twentieth Century-Fox appreciated $20,000,000, rising from 22½ to 35. RKO added $3,675,000 to its market value by advancing from 5 to around 8.

Reflecting the improved financial structure of the industry, film company bonds on the stock exchange showed wide gains. RKO 6s of 1941 sold as high as 122 and finished at around 115 for a gain of almost 38 points. Warners convertible 6s of 1939, keeping pace with the relative stock, rose more than 13 points to above 99. Paramount Broadway 3s of 1955 showed 15 points gain above 72, while Paramount 6s of 1955 were up more than 8 at above par.

Curb exchange transactions were featured by activity and strength in Technicolor, Trans-Lux and Universal.

RKO Reorganization Objector Files Plaint

It was Edward J. Hickey, an RKO stockholder, who last Thursday filed with Judge William Bondy a petition declaring that the current reorganization plan of RKO is aimed at giving control to RCA and asked that the current court action be dismissed.

Mr. Hickey charges that RKO has reclassified Class A stock in a manner causing present owners of Class A to lost three-fourths of their holdings. He further alleges that the stock represented to be held by Atlas Corporation was obtained from holdings of stock illegally acquired from RKO. These holdings, he claims, are bound up and co-mingled with the rights and interests of the holders of Class A stock and therefore should not be recognized. Mr. Hickey further claims that Judge Bondy lacks the necessary full knowledge of the case.

Fox Seeks to Sell Academy of Music

The Academy of Music in New York, theatrical landmark, will be sold for $100,000 if a petition filed before Federal Judge Manton in New York by Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres Corporation, is granted. Mr. Weisman seeks to relieve a mortgage on the theatre by its sale.

COPYRIGHT AND BLOCK BOOKING ACTION ALONE CALLED POSSIBLE

Opinion at Washington Indicates Trade Practice Agreements Have Reduced Demand for Pettengill Block Bill

Duffy Bill Would Have to Be Reintroduced; Increase of Admission Tax Doubted; Industrial Control an Issue

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Copyright and block booking are expected to be the only measures directed at the film industry to come up for consideration during the coming session of Congress.

While bills may, and probably will, be introduced touching upon the picture industry, as for example proposals to lift the present ban on fight films, it is not anticipated that any definite "reform" drive will be made.

Although Representative Pettengill of Indiana, sponsor of the major of several anti-block booking bills introduced last session, is reported to feel he has increased support for his legislation, it is said that the trade practice agreements recently made between the exhibitors and producers, giving theatre operators broader privileges, have served to reduce exhibitor demands for legislation.

Copyright legislation is now a perennial, coming up yearly but withering before it reaches full bloom. Representative Sirovich of New York, author of the measure on which attention was focussed last winter, undoubtedly will make another effort to rewrite the copyright laws.

Chairman of the patents committee, the New York Congressman has concentrated his efforts on this legislation for several years, but, due to his unfortunate faculty of creating dissension in his own committee, never has been able to get a bill through the House. The Duffy bill, passed by the Senate in 1935 and last year requiring only House action to become a law, died with the adjournment of the session and will have to be reintroduced if any steps toward enactment are to be taken.

Admission Tax Rise Doubted

So far as taxes are concerned, present indications are that the status quo will be maintained on the admissions tax. The present increased rate is due to expire next year, along with a number of other emergency levies. Some of these taxes are expected to be dropped because they cost more to collect than they return in revenue, but the admission tax is not among that group, since it brings in several million dollars clear profit annually. On the other hand, it is not anticipated that any increase will be made in the present tax on admissions.

A long session of Congress, running into the summer months, is fore-shadowed by the legislative program with which it must deal, and the protracted session will give opertunity for discussion of matters not on the Administration program, such as motion pictures, although it is believed the President and his advisers will frown upon the enactment of any legislation tending further to restrict industry, finally solidly on the up grade after years of effort.

Of outstanding importance to the picture industry and to all others is the question of industrial control, a complex subject on which a score of bills, dealing with it in various ways, are expected to be introduced. These measures will include a proposal for a constitutional amendment to redefine the term "interstate commerce" so as to give the Government authority to deal with labor and social problems; the O'Mahoney bill for Federal incorporation and licensing of concerns engaged in interstate commerce; revival of the NRA in such form as to meet the objections raised to the original act by the supreme court, and expansion of the anti-trust laws to make unfair treatment of labor an unfair method of competition.

All branches of the film industry would be directly affected by legislation to be introduced by Representative Patman of Texas, co-author of the Robinson-Patman anti-price discrimination act, designed as a companion piece to that measure and prohibiting producers and manufacturers from engaging in retail business, with a specific provision that exhibition of motion pictures shall be considered as retail business, thus bringing the producers under the law.

However, Congressman Patman will guard against the upheaval of business which would result if his divorce bill forced manufacturers immediately to dispose of their retail holdings, by providing that the legislation shall not take effect until three years after its enactment.

If adopted, the bill would require the producers to divest themselves entirely of their theatre holdings. Enactment of the measure, it is believed, would stem the demand for anti-block booking legislation, much of which has been based on the charge that the producer-distributors favor their own houses at the expense of the independents.

Extension of the reciprocal tariff legislation, due to expire June 30, next, will, it is expected, involve an effort to amend the law so as to continue the President's power to make reciprocal trade agreements but restore to the Senate its former authority to review and ratify all treaties, although it is expected such a concession would be strongly opposed by President Roosevelt.

Other Laws Expiring

A number of other emergency laws expire during the next few months, the authority of the President to deal with the gold content of the dollar ceasing January 30 and the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation ending the following day. These and practically all other measures lapsing during the coming year are expected to be continued.

Changes to strengthen the constitutionality of the social security act and make it more workable are also expected to be asked by the President during the session.

In addition to the long list of "must" measures which the President will ask of Congress from time to time, the session will have to consider the usual routine appropriation bills for the various permanent departments, bureaus and commissions and make provision for the financing of such of the emergency organizations as are to be continued. An immediate appropriation of at least $500,000,000 is expected to be asked by the President for relief purposes, with another appropriation of possibly twice that sum before the end of the session.

With such a lengthy program of legislation before it, experienced observers in Washington believe it will be impossible for Congress to adjourn before July.

OHIO TAX MEASURE EXTENDED BY BILL

Action on state and local taxation measures continued this week with the scheduled signing of an extension of the Ohio sales tax and moves for higher theatre fees in two Wisconsin cities.

Governor Davey of Ohio was expected to sign a bill extending the three per cent sales tax and its accompanying three per cent admission tax this week. Exhibitors of the state are relieved because under the current law which was due to expire March 1st there has been a possibility of a return of the 10 per cent admission tax.

The common council of Beloit, Wis., is considering an ordinance which would raise the theatre license fee from $50 a theatre to 25 cents a seat and would exclude from licensing any new theatre with a total investment of less than $75,000. A council ordinance proposing an upward revision in theatre license fees has also been drafted in Milwaukee. Under the proposal the fee would range from a minimum of $30 per year to $75. At present all houses seating over 250 pay an annual fee of $30.

Three bills affecting films are expected at the Nebraska legislative session. One would require two operators in a booth for houses seating more than 600, another is for a graduated occupations tax on circuit houses and a third is for a sales tax.

Joseph Bertotti Passes

Joseph Bertotti, 64, oldest exhibitor in Clinton, Ind., died there last week after a short illness. He opened his first theatre in Clinton in 1909 and continued as an exhibitor until two years ago when he sold the Columbia theatre and retired. He is survived by three sons and two daughters.

DUALS GAIN GROUND IN EIGHT KEY CITIES

First-Runs in Canada Turn to Doubles; Chicago, Kansas City Extend Twin Practice

The double bill policy this week made gains in several important key cities. Chicago and Kansas City took the lead in the extension, and twin features also were introduced into additional theatres in Albany, Syracuse, Pittsburgh, Toronto, London, Ont., and Omaha. In Palo Alto, Cal., however, students of Stanford University launched an anti-dual campaign, aimed at the Stanford and President theatres there.

E. S. Young's Roanoke theatre in Kansas City introduced double features, leaving the Tower and Mainstreet alone in the first-run field still showing one picture. So universal has the practice become in the territory that exchange men can make only a half-hearted attempt to enforce the single feature clause in the contracts covering certain pictures. The Fox Plaza is the only subsequent run house still holding out against the practice, with 43 of the 44 subsequent runs using them.

Warner this week decided to put its Chicago theatres on a double feature policy, thus making the practice 100 per cent in the B and C week theatres, with the smaller houses scheduled to follow suit soon. Balaban and Katz already has added nine more of its B theatres to those featuring two features.

The RKO Palace, a Fabian theatre in Albany, downtown first-run house, inaugurated dual bills this month. The Strand had announced inception of the policy during the holiday season.

Doubles in Reopened Theatre

The RKO-Schine, which reopened in Syracuse on a single feature basis in August, also switched to double features during the holiday season except for one week, during which a Major Bowes unit accompanied the picture.

The Harris-Palace in Pittsburgh also changed to a double feature policy. The Warner has been playing the extended downtown engagement of "Born to Dance" on a single feature basis, but will return to its former policy of two features upon the picture's completion.

Minneapolis Allied Firm

First-runs finally have succumbed to the double bill trend in Canada's leading situations. In Toronto, the new policy has been adopted by the Imperial and Uptown, operated by Famous Players Canadian, and at Loew's, the technical exception being Shea's Hippodrome where a combination vaudeville and film offering has been in effect for many months.

In nearby London, regarded as the last stronghold of single features, duals have been adopted in five of the seven theatres, the change being affected at the Patricia, Palace, Grand, Centre and Rex.

After dropping the 55-cent top admission in favor of a 40-cent scale two weeks ago, Tri-State's Paramount theatre at Omaha, reopened in October after being dark for over a year, has now changed to double features.

In Minneapolis, the Twin City branch of Northwest Allied voted unanimously to maintain a single feature policy for one more year. The meeting of independent exhibitors representing an almost 100 per cent Minneapolis and St. Paul membership was enthusiastic in its support of the single bill program, particularly with "the coming of better times assured."

Funeral Services Held For Irene Fenwick

Simple Catholic services were held in Hollywood Monday at Calvary Mausoleum for Irene Fenwick, Mrs. Lionel Barrymore, who died last Thursday after an illness of several months. Only the family and close friends attended. Pallbearers were: George Cukor, Paul Lukas, Sam Hofenstein, Earl Barker and Stanley Campbell. Honorary pallbearers were: Louis B. Mayer, Al Woods, Edmund Lowe, Harry Cruikshank, Winston Thomas, Arthur Cooley, G. W. Colby, Edward Sheldon and Mike Scherling.

Born in Chicago 49 years ago, Miss Fenwick made her first stage appearance in 1904 in the chorus of "Peggy From Paris," under the management of H. W. Savage. Within a month she had the leading role in the play. Her first big hit was in "The Zebra" in 1911 and from then on she appeared in such plays as "The Fortune Hunter," "Along Came Ruth," "A Stitch in Time," "The Piker" and "Taps." She and Mr. Barrymore were married in Rome in 1923 after their appearance in "The Claw" and several other Broadway hits.

WPA Workers Reassured Positions Are Secure

Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of the Works Progress Administration in Washington, this week told actors, musicians, writers and artists who are employed on Federal projects to disregard reports that these projects were to be curtailed below the point where adequate relief work would be given.

"That has never been contemplated," Mr. Hopkins said. "It is generally recognized that work of great, and we hope, lasting and cultural value has been accomplished by these projects. They have served to indicate, in my opinion, the broader function the arts should perform in our society.

"Those in actual need will continue to receive employment, if not on their present projects, then in other useful capacities. Non-relief employment on the works program will be curtailed wherever possible but all who are certified as in need will find our rolls open to them."

Newmade Opens Offices

Newmade Products Corporation opened its new offices at 427 West 42nd street in New York last week.

Expect Numerous Bills in Congress Aimed at Radio

An unusually large number of legislative measures affecting the radio broadcasting industry are expected when Congress and 44 state legislatures get under way this year. At Washington, the eyes of the radio industry are turned toward the possibilities of repeal of the five per cent tax on radio sales, which with other nuisance taxes, is scheduled to expire June 30th.

The industry also will be affected by other legislation which is slated to come up in Congress, including the 30-hour week bill, proposed Federal incorporation of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce, revision of the social security act and the Walsh-Healey Government-contracts law, the anticipated Patman bill prohibiting the manufacturers from engaging in direct selling, and Federal Trade Commission proposals to penalize "deceptive acts or practices."

In the more than two-score state legislatures which will start in January much special legislation on radio is expected. This will range all the way from excise taxes on radio sales to the banning of automobile receivers and the Nevada proposal to require state registration of trade marks.

In anticipation of a busy winter, radio industry leaders already are preparing for the appearance of strong representatives before all legislative bodies considering radio bills, particularly those which would tend in any way to limit the market.

Cullman Seen as Chairman of Roxy

Howard S. Cullman, trustee for the Roxy Theatre in New York, in all probability will be named chairman of the board of the new operating company to be set up by Twentieth Century-Fox after the Roxy is reorganized. This is expected April 1st or 15th. The new operating company will be a subsidiary of National Theatres which is the holding company for all Twentieth Century-Fox exhibition interests.

Mr. Cullman is said to have been offered the post but has turned it down, the reason given said to be that he will not consider any proposals while representing the court in the present operation of the theatre. Harry Arthur and Jack Partington of Artco also are scheduled to continue with the theatre under a long-term management contract with the new company.

F. J. Coyle Is Dead

Frank J. Coyle, brother of John G. Von Herberg of Jensen-Von Herberg Circuit, died in Seattle late last week following an illness of several months. He was well known in the Pacific Northwest theatre field, having managed the Liberty in Seattle for the past several years.

Ruf Joins Columbia Staff

Walter Ruf, formerly with Royal Reviews, Inc., has joined Bill Thomas' publicity staff at Columbia in Hollywood, succeeding Barney Hutchinson, resigned.

Adolph Zukor

An appreciation on his twenty-fifth anniversary in motion picture production

BY TERRY RAMSAYE

ADOLPH ZUKOR

NOW we have come to the year of 1937, the twenty-fifth of motion picture drama and of Mr. Adolph Zukor, so largely the founder of the era in which the screen has become a world institution, dominant among the media of human expression.

To many of us it must seem but a little while ago that this man set about the great adventure that was to prove the making of a new dominion of art and industry. There is the seeming of magic when one shifts the eye of inspection from the memories of 1912 to the facts and manifestations of today. But in all the years between there has been a purposeful continuity of constructive exploration, filled with labours and travails, dotted and landmarked by defeats and successes.

Reflection brings to me now the realization that many times before, through two decades of recording the annals of the screen, there has been occasion to set down progressive chapters of the intense story that is Adolph Zukor. At intervals that seem frequent in retrospect, the vista finds him standing in positions of commanding eminence in his industry as the milestones of the years fall behind. Having so often recorded him for the printed page and the bookshelves of the world, makes this anniversary attention for his own people, all of us of the motion picture, pleasantly familiar and suffused with a certain glow of participation.

THERE is, it would seem, a particular significance in the fact that the picture which accompanies these words is Mr. Zukor's favourite photograph, that it is unretouched, that it was made not in his more abundant yesterdays but recently, that it shows him standing, facing forward, obviously determined, apparently assured. In the all unconscious bearing of it, the camera has caught that something of posture, expressing the man within, which restates elements of the statue to show us the spirit of David Farragut at his moment of "damn the torpedoes," the poised aggression of the classic Nike of Samothrace, the calm, bold daring that someway asserted itself under the chisels of the men who carved the figureheads for the Yankee clipperships in their era of supremacy of the seas.

THAT is what he has always done. It has taken him a whole quarter of a century, a generation in the life of his contemporaries, to come to an anniversary. It is also a reasonable conjecture that this anniversary is considerably more an event of the corporation that he conceived and nurtured than of him. In person he has never been one to count the yesterdays.

Considering the career of the man Zukor it becomes conspicuous that his dominant motivation seems ever to have been a conviction that tomorrow would be better. He enjoyed the tremendous advantage of starting with an industry for which any way that it went from where it was was up.

One outstanding aspect of the career of Mr. Zukor has ever been a working philosophy, expressed in action and attitude rather than words, of taking care of the job before him with the reasonable assumption that it would take care of him. That has not been a very generally held attitude, but it is to be observed that quite a number of his contemporaries of the earlier period, who planned more for themselves than for their industry, have not survived in status the better thereby.

THE motion picture as an institution is peculiarly indebted to Mr. Zukor for being ever willing to think well of it and to be assured and confident of progress to a better tomorrow.

In every period of the motion picture since it emerged from peep show arcade to screen the majority have devoted themselves to the immediate day, to the exploitation of the status quo, resulting inevitably in the opinion that pictures were good enough and the business at its crest. At about the juncture when Adolph Zukor was to obtrude on the picture scene, a Brooklyn magnate of the era about to end, the production head of his company, paid himself off with a thousand dollar check every afternoon. This man did not think that the motion picture was going anywhere — and that was 1912, when the nickelodeon was about seven years old. There were about 18,000 of the little movie storeshows. Ten cents was the admission price. Seven hundred seats made a big house. The annual gross film rental of the industry amounted to a figure that would closely resemble today's Hollywood budget for a few good pictures.

JUST about the time the founders of the industry had decided that it was at its ceiling, Mr. Zukor moved in upstairs with some prints of Louis Mercanton's "Queen Elizabeth" with Sarah Bernhardt, shortly to crystalize that distribution project and the budding pressure of the feature era into his notion of famous players in famous plays. That was plainly enough an address at entertainment of a higher order, aimed at larger audiences, higher buying power.

This meant confidence enough in the motion picture to indulge in production costs, which, modest as they seem beside today's figures, were viewed as mad extravagances then. The first step was to bring to the screen an amazing array of names covered with the honors and glamour of the lofty, somewhat supercilious, stage, such names as Hackett, Kalich, Belasco, O'Neill, Fiske, Frohman. And there was enough elasticity in the concept to discover quickly that the screen, through the nickelodeon years, had been making a scarcely recognized fame of a new order for its own tomorrow, conspicuously with Miss Mary Pickford, who very presently became Mr. Zukor's most valued and valuable screen asset, kept as his against all comers and all bidders. And again in the immediately ensuing years he continuously went to the top of the market for talent at new and rising figures for the best box office talent that the world offered, including, it is to be remembered, that famous triumvirate of Griffith, Ince and Sennett. The fact is that once, when the Famous Players project was forming, Mr. Zukor had made an offer of $50,000 a year for the services of David Wark Griffith, when Famous Players had nothing resembling that sum of money.

THAT firm faith in the essential value of the best and nothing but the best, for the screen, resulted in a concentration under Zukor auspices of the greatest assemblance of star value, in proportion to its day, that the industry has ever seen. It is reasonably accurate to say that only two top rank box office names of the period were not brought to bag—Charles Chaplin and Maude Adams.

Parenthetically, it seems probable that whatever the official reasons may have been, the basic facts would include Miss Adams' idiosyncratic philosophy which did not exalt the screen, and like as not the improbability of Mr. Zukor's enjoyment of the Chaplin philosophy expressed in comedy based on the triumph of the boob, a ragamuffin hero in baggy pants.

That just incidentally brings the recollection that it is a part of the Zukor success story that in his struggling days when he could afford but one suit of clothes at a time he paid a hundred dollars for it, and took care of it. He had always been like that, it seems, for a classic reference of his up-from-the-East-side story is the yarn about saving, with his two roommates, Max and Ignatz, enough to attend a Sarah Bernhardt performance, in course of one of her earlier farewell tours. By the device of the pass-out check, each saw one act of the best show in town. The best, ever the best, seems to have been a fundamental Zukor idea.

THIS idea first brought to bear upon the screen in Famous Players may probably with fairness be considered ancestral to the whole structure of perfection-at-any-price policy which has made American motion picture production technique world dominant — explaining why today Hollywood has contributed both pattern and personnel to the most ambitious studios overseas, from England's Pinewood to the Soviet's new plant in the Crimea.

The field of exhibition will be interested, too, in an episode connected with the impact of the Zukor policy on Broadway showmanship. Mr. Zukor dashed into his Fifth Avenue office, somewhat later than usual after lunch. He was aglow with a notion.

"I've just bought the Rialto and the Rivoli for us," he announced.

"And for how much?" Jesse Lasky inquired.

"I don't remember just now," Mr. Zukor replied. That was not what he was thinking about. "We need them to represent us on Broadway."

Obviously what Mr. Zukor was buying was only incidentally two pieces of theatre real estate, but rather bringing into the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation something of the glorification that had been given the film by the euphemistic showmanship of Samuel L. Rothafel and the musical endowments and embellishments of the screen by Hugo Riesenfeld.

This might be taken to give occasion for a paraphrase of Howard Dietz's famous Goldwyn-Shaw set-up, by comment on Mr. Zukor the artist and Mr. Lasky the business man. Anyway their policies delivered, and the product carried many an executive along with it to fame and fortune.

THE probability is that today, in Hollywood amidst the concerns of production, Mr. Zukor is a bit nearer the position of his heart's desire than ever before in his long motion picture career. From the first, meaning the formation of the original Famous Players, he has been more acutely and immediately interested in the making of pictures than any other phase of the industry. For many and many a year it has been observable that he would render million dollar decisions on short notice, but that when by chance and circumstance he was brought into the discussion of a production he would spend endless hours on story value and treatment. "I took over the business responsibilities, originally," he once remarked, "because when we were putting this business together it seemed that probably I was best equipped to do it—it was not my special preference."

Whatever the role for Mr. Zukor is to be, it would appear that he decided long ago that he was, as they said in the war, "in for the duration." That was put to the test 'way back in 1916. It was when the late and well near forgotten Triangle Film Corporation was a bright ascendant aurora in the screen sky. The extreme high pressure of promotion made it seem that Triangle might be about to dominate the industry. A part of its ambitious plan was to absorb the Famous-Players-Lasky-Paramount organization, the only opposition of importance in sight. In the negotiations it was necessary, if anything was to be accomplished, to overtake Adolph Zukor. An offer was made to him of a million dollars net for his interest.

FOR many a year it has been Mr. Zukor's habit to walk while he thinks, on any difficult subject. That week he walked most of the time. When he got tired of walking his answer to the Triangle bankers and promoters was "No."

"That million would have made a nice stake for the family," Mr. Zukor recalled in years after, "but it would have left me nothing to do—except run a shoe store, maybe, or something like that. There I was with a million bet, and was sitting with one ace. I decided to stay and play."

The ace of course was the Zukor contract with Miss Mary Pickford.

There are no indications that Mr. Zukor has at any time since seriously considered withdrawing from the big game. He has had and seen, coming and going, many a million since, and it is likely that a million will never look as big to him again as the one he decided was not big enough in 1916.

IN this period of much discussion of the motion picture's social and moral status, it is fitting to record that down the years ever since the screen became important, Mr. Zukor has exerted an influence toward the accurate alignment of the screen with American mores and the right. A decision had to be made for the Paramount product early in the feature era, in the face of conspicuous competitive temptation. Important contribution to the greater public acceptance and appreciation of the motion picture resulted.

It is fitting, too, to set down here record of the fact that Mr. Zukor has ever been conscious of the importance of a competent and untrammelled motion picture industry press. Not so long ago he remarked to the editor of these pages:

"I read Motion Picture Herald every week—because you say what you think, no matter who likes it."

UNREST IN SHANGHAI CUTS THEATRE ATTENDANCE TO HALF OF NORMAL

Japanese Marines with Fixed Bayonets Patrol Streets of Hongkew District and Several Theatres Are Barred to Public

by Special Correspondent

Owing to the sporadic outburst of incidents and their resultant effect on trade in general, it is best not to take any single incident as affecting business over a period, but to wait and see the accumulative result over a period of time.

Since the beginning of this autumn's troubles in the northern or Hongkew district of Shanghai there has been a constant daily exodus of local residents to the southern and western districts and French Concession. At times this exodus has reached almost a stampede of over-wrought and fear-ridden people, and consequently business in hundreds of shops ceased, proprietors closed or moved to other areas.

At this writing (November 20th) a walk through the main business thoroughfare of Hongkew presented a sight of hundreds of empty, shuttered shops and dark streets. Undoubtedly the unrest has affected the Japanese owned shops also, and certainly it has had a disastrous effect upon cinemas in the locality. The presence of Japanese marines with fixed bayonets on prominent street intersections, the presence of Japanese Naval Patrol station in the heart of the Hongkew cinema center where three foreign cinemas, also one Chinese and a new Japanese theatre are located, almost alongside each other, with the usual hullabaloo connected with each turn out of patrols, armored cars, armed motorcycles, and so on, has resulted in some performances being shut off to the public entirely, and has reduced the attendance to what one wellknown foreign exhibitor in that area declares to be only 50 per cent of normal business.

The fact that the entire northern area with its dozens of cabarets, beer halls and its low-priced cinemas was out of bounds to the entire forces of the U. S. Navy Asiatic Fleet during its recent regular autumn visit, after returning from northern waters on their way to Manila caused a concentrated protest from all sides to lessen the armed display and allow business to reap the harvest usually attendant on fleet visits, but to no avail, as to date all protests have had little or no effect.

New Threat to Cinemas

Removals continue slowly, and with this writing a Japanese committee has presented a petition for the creation of a Special Administration District in the northern area. Such a district, administered by Japanese and Chinese authorities, would probably be outside the present limits of the International Settlement, but details are not available, and unless such area were definitely outside the present Settlement, many of the cinemas now located in Hongkew would be affected.

It is true that the theatres now suffering are small, subsequent-run houses, whose revenue in the aggregate is not large compared with the whole of Shanghai. But they play to a class that appreciates the low prices, and whose cinema entertainment is entirely with these small theatres, and the loss of business is causing anxiety among theatre owners who have just about managed to keep out of the red in the best of times.

Slow Recovery Seen

It is difficult to say what the result will be should negotiations in Nanking fail. Hongkew and Chapei have not yet recovered from the disastrous war of 1932. The creation of a Special Administrative District may and may not result in better times for the cinemas, as undoubtedly Japanese censorship would prevail in such an area and cinemas located therein would be subject to taxing and control by the Special District's administrators. Under any circumstances, theatre business will have an extremely slow recovery in the northern area of Shanghai.

The movement of the population has had little effect upon cinema admissions in the other areas, since, as has been pointed out, most of the attendance depended upon the low-priced theatres of which comparatively few are located in the unaffected localities.

On the whole, the entire cinema trade in Shanghai, Tientsin, Peiping and other ports where Sino-Chinese troubles have arisen, has taken a decided relapse in the last few months, and instead of the optimism prevailing when the first part of 1936 started out so successfully, the box office receipts, with exception of a few isolated places and films, have taken such a downward trend that every distributor feels himself butting against forces that, willy-nilly will create a pessimistic outlook unless peace and normal business conditions are allowed to re-establish themselves in this country.

Censorship Against Paramount

Both distributors and exhibitors in China are considerably disturbed over the sudden action the censors in Nanking took against Paramount Films of China, Inc.

With no official announcement of the new rule, said in effect to ban the entire product of any foreign producer who distributes a film anywhere in the world that is considered offensive to Chinese dignity, and without giving Paramount Films of China, Inc., any hearing whatsoever, the censors in Nanking in the first week of November refused to admit further Paramount Pictures. No warning was issued, and no official notice was sent to Paramount in China. As a consequence, being entirely unprepared with no unreleased films on hand, a serious situation was created in two of the Shanghai first-run cinemas, necessitating a complete shift in programs and advertising.

The matter seems to have been based on a report by the Chinese Vice-Consul in Los Angeles that Paramount's studios had refused to make certain cuts in "Klondike Annie" and had refused to withdraw "The General Died at Dawn" from circulation.

Protests Avail Nothing When Northern Shanghai Is Ruled Out of Bounds to American Sailors; Taxing Feared Also

Negotiations immediately took place between the censors in Nanking and Paramount Films of China, Inc., and at this writing the troubled situation seems to have eased somewhat. The censors offered to suspend the ban, pending importation of a print of "The General Died at Dawn," which will receive the regular censorship and, if found unsatisfactory, will be barred. It still remains to be seen if the print itself can be confiscated; but it is likely that only re-export under bond will be required, according to the rule in force. The confiscation rule of Aug. 10th has not yet been tried in the case of American distributors.

Under the circumstances, American distributors in China have been extremely concerned, since several major producers have produced films declared offensive to China, and, as in the cast of Paramount, might be subject to the same drastic action without warning, thus disrupting the exhibition in the first-run theatres and creating a severe shortage of films. Consequently, assistance has been asked from the State Department in Washington, by which it is hoped so to clarify any future action of the Chinese Government that misunderstanding and sudden disruption of the market will be avoided.

Paramount Ruling Accepted

United States District Judge Coxe in New York Monday formally accepted the ruling of the United States circuit court of appeals in overruling Referee John E. Joyce's refusal to allow a claim of the Madison-Toledo Company against Paramount for $18,000. The court also allowed $403 for court expenses. The company will make the payment with $9,000 in debentures and $9,000 in first preferred stock.

W. J. Brady, Actor, Passes

William J. Brady, veteran character actor on the Broadway stage, and a charter member of Actors Equity Association, died at his home in New York Monday. He was 66 and had been in ill health for a year. His first role was in 1897 in "A Lady of Quality" and his last in "Hold Your Horses" three years ago. He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth Cunningham Brady.

Chicago Passes "Ecstasy"

"Ecstasy was passed by the Chicago board of censors Monday without any deletions and was given a general permit. The picture opened at the World theatre, with an "adults only" sign displayed. The newspaper campaign on the picture is "extremely mild" and it is understood the censor attitude was that so much has been taken out that nothing remains in the film to be harmful.

Musicians Obtain Philadelphia Pact

The campaign for live entertainment in motion picture theatres, waged for the last three months by the Philadelphia musicians' union against Warner Brothers circuit, was ended by a compromise effected in New York under which the number of men to be employed, at least on a part time basis, will be more than 100 in excess of the number employed last year.

The agreement was reached by Thomas F. Gamble and George B. Henderson, executive offiicers of the American Federation of Musicians; A. Anthony Tomei, A. Rex Riccardi and the full membership of the executive committee of the musicians' union, and Frank Phelps, Ted Schlanger and Ellis Shipman for Warner Brothers.

The circuit spent $143,000 for music in Philadelphit last year, although they guaranteed to spend only $103,000. The new settlement sets the minimum figure at $176,500. In the neighborhood theatre field, the 13 houses having stage shows for one day each week is reduced to 10, but instead of a one day showing the new arrangement calls for a full week of vaudeville at the Allegheny starting December 28th, three days a week at the Oxford, a single day at two theatres, and two days a week at four others.

For the downtown Fox and Earle theatres, the same number of men will be retained, 35 at the Fox and 26 at the Earle, with a $5 weekly increase in salary. Stage shows returned to the Earle on December 24th but picture commitments will keep the Fox on a straight picture policy until early in January.

The contract runs for a full year and instead of being retroactive to September 1936, the deadline was moved to December. The final settlement came as a surprise after all negotiations during the previous week ended in a stalemate.

GTE Salaries Published

Earle G. Hines, president of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., received $41,900 as compensation for the past year, according to a statement just issued by the Stock Exchange in New York on the new Form 22 registration statements of the Securities and Exchange Commission. W. E. Green, president-sub of GTE, received $23,300; M. V. Carooll, treasurer, $18,575. Eight directors, including the president and registrant, were paid $44,960 while three officers, not directors, received $52,350.

Film Salesmen Change Name

Motion Picture Associates was decided upon this week as the new name for the Motion Picture Salesmen in New York at a meeting of the organization at the Twentieth Century-Fox exchange. The membership was also increased by 13. Induction of officers will take place January 7.

To Unveil Roxy Monument

A monument to the late S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel will be unveiled at 2 o'clock January 10 in the cemetery of Central Synagogue at 55-22 Metropolitan Avenue, Ridgewood, Long Island.

Allow Income Credit On Stock Dividends

Stock dividends of corporations to the extent of the fair market value of any stock issued, where such distributors are clearly taxable to the shareholders under the provisions of the 1936 act, will be allowed by the Internal Revenue Bureau as a credit in the audit of corporation income tax returns, it was disclosed this week by Commissioner Guy T. Helvering in Washington.

No dividends paid credit, however, will be allowed with respect to a stock dividend distribution if the receipt of the stock clearly constitutes a non-taxable receipt by the shareholder.

In any case where the taxability of the distribution is debatable, the bureau will adopt a general policy of making a tentative allowance pending a final determination.

The new regulations are issued under the provisions of the 1936 act imposing taxes on corporate income withheld from distribution.

Ostrers Remain; Deal Unchanged

Isidore and Maurice Ostrer cancelled their reservations on the Normandie for sailing from New York for London last Saturday and will remain in America for several weeks. No significance is seen in the delay and there is little possibility of any further conferences with the Schenck brothers on the Gaumont British deal, it was learned.

Isidore Ostrer told reporters that the postponement of the sailing date was "for personal reasons." Nicholas Schenck left early this week for Miami for a month's vacation and Maurice Ostrer and Arthur Lee, GB executive in New York, also left for Florida. Mr. Ostrer and Mr. Lee are expected to stay at the Florida home of Willard S. McKay, general counsel of Universal.

During their stay in America the Ostrers have had one conference with Joseph and Nicholas Schenck and Sidney R. Kent, at which the GB executives offered to buy the 49 per cent stock interest in Metropolis and Bradford Trust, holding company for GB, from 20th Century-Fox and Loew's. The proposal was refused by the American executives.

Paramount Band Poll Winners Are Announced

Guy Lombardo, Fred Waring and Glenn Gray have been selected the three winners in the New York Paramount theatre orchestra poll, conducted among patrons of the house during the past year. The three winning leaders will be awarded trophies by Bob Weitman, managing director.

Associates Honor Dowd

Approximately 150 associates and friends of John Dowd, RKO circuit publicity and advertising head in New York, honored him with a dinner at the Hotel Edison Monday night in celebration of his marriage on January 7. Mr. Dowd was presented a set of solid silver as a gift.

Joseph Podoloff, Minneapolis salesman for Twentieth Century-Fox, has been promoted to branch manager.

Austro-German Pact Observed

Austria's contingent agreement with Germany which makes allowance for the exportation of 14 motion pictures to that country during 1936 has been strictly observed, according to a report of the Department of Commerce in Washington.

Some Austrian producers, it is pointed out, were of the opinion that the number would be increased and as a result the entire quota was soon exhausted. As Germany refused to agree to any alteration of the contingent agreement, Vienna studios are for the most part inactive.

The limitation of 14 films, the report states, will compel Austrian studios to produce only feature films of first quality in the future, since average pictures would not be profitable.

It is doubtful, the report continued, if conditions will permit the production of even 14 pictures in Vienna during the coming contingent year. In neighboring countries, film producers receive financial assistance from the government, but such subsidies are unknown in Austria. Therefore, it was reported in Vienna that producers may avail themselves of these opportunities and move their studios from Austria.

Vienna producers state that a yearly subsidy of approximately one million schillings, about $200,000, would be sufficient to carry the Austrian film industry and it is pointed out that such a sum would soon return to the government in the form of taxes. Producers declare they would abandon Vienna with reluctance, but economic conditions may compel them to do so, according to the report.

Cowdin to England To Study Prospects

J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board of Universal Pictures Company, sailed from New York for London this week to acquaint his British associate with the progress that has been made in revamping the Universal production and distribution organization since he and his associates, R. H. Cochrane and Charles R. Rogers, assumed direction of the company's affairs following the acquisition of control from the Carl Laemmle interests last spring. Mr. Cowdin will visit Universal's offices in primary European centers to discuss details of releasing the company's pictures on the continent.

"With the motion picture attendance here running approximately 15 per cent ahead of a year ago and the initial releases by New Universal enjoying a favorable reception by both exhibitors and the public in this country," said Mr. Cowdin, "I am interested in getting at first hand information regarding the outlook at this time for our pictures on the other side. Universal has always enjoyed a substantial market abroad.

"Reports on the showing in London of 'My Man Godfrey' indicate an enthusiastic reception with the probability that as the picture is released elsewhere in the United Kingdom its American success fill be duplicated there."

CHANCE GAME BATTLE IN CHICAGO BRINGS ARREST OF 15 EXHIBITORS

Police Commissioner Follows Up Threat with Raids on Theatres; "Airtight Case" Prepared for Hearing on January 15

Declared Legal in Redwood City, Cal., Illegal in Mobile, Ala.; Bank Night Insurance Unlawful in Oklahoma Houses

Following a period during which chance games moved into new territories, this week found authorities in eight more cities moving to stop the schemes.

In Chicago, authorities moved to eliminate the games from theatres by arresting 15 managers. In Redwod, Cal., the games were declared legal; in Mobile, Ala., illegal. Atlanta theatre owners were revising their chance game procedure to circumvent the Georgia lottery laws. At Beloit, Wis., city officials were seeking an injunction to prevent theatres from using them. The practice was stopped in Toronto. New Orleans courts held they were in violation of lottery laws. Bank Night insurance was declared a lottery in the state of Oklahoma. Massachusetts courts threw out an infringement action, claiming Bank Night entered public domain when it entered theatres.

A suit was filed in the circuit court at Chicago on Wednesday, asking receivership for theatre prize deposits estimated at more than $100,000, against 87 independent theatres and the Balaban and Katz, Warner and Allied circuits. The suit was brought by Mrs. Elizabeth Mannasmith, who described herself as a taxpayer and theatregoer, and asked that the defendants be compelled to account for all such funds in their possession, that they turn the money over to the receiver and that present holders be enjoined from disposing of the funds pending outcome of the suit.

Chicago police had threatened arrest to theatre managers conducting Bank Night in their drive to eliminate the practice and over the weekend they carried out their threats with wholesale raids. More than 15 managers were arrested and released on bail for hearings on January 15, at the request of Corporation Counsel Barnet Hodes, who said he planned an "airtight case" against the theatre men.

Circuit houses as well as independent theatres received police visits. The officers waited until drawings had been held, or prizes had been awarded, before making the arrests. Patrons booed and hissed.

Some managers advertised the drawings late at night and then held them early to avoid arrests. Others completed them with the assistant managers in charge after the police had taken the managers to headquarters.

Circuits Await Outcome

With the announcement of the date of the trials as January 15, circuit men said they would stop all games in their theatres until the legal difficulties are untangled. Independent operators also were planning to halt the practice until after the situation is aired in court. Some houses with drawings scheduled for next week said they would go ahead with plans. These include the Oriental and State-Lake in the Loop. Managers said circuit executives had offered them no advice as to what to do.

Mayor Edward Kelly, on Monday, said: "These theatre managers are not criminals. The law is being enforced simply because it is the law. We have had very few complaints about Bank Night, Screeno and similar novelties—but they are against the law."

NEW JERSEY BANS BINGO IN TAVERNS

The popular game of Bingo has been banned as a game of chance from rooms where liquor is served in New Jersey, in a ruling by State Beverage Control Commissioner D. Frederick Burnett in Newark. The ruling said that arguments over the game might easily cause trouble in a barroom.

Exhibitors have been complaining that commercial establishments running Bingo games have had a noticeable effect on box office receipts.

Monday afternoon Alderman Walter J. Orlokoski promised to introduce an ordinance repealing the ban on prize giveaways. At the same time Police Commissioner Allman said that no more theatre managers would be arrested. Theatre groups and game operators were planning for the legal battle.

Not Illegal in Redwood City

Bank Night, Merchants' Cash Night and other chance game systems are not illegal under the state and county lottery laws, City Attorney Albert Mansfield told the Redwood City (Cal.) council this week.

The decision is of interest to theatre operators throughout the state, as well as in San Mateo county, because Mr. Mansfield's legal opinion was admittedly based on a consideration of giveaways published in the November issue of the California Law Review, organ of the School of Jurisprudence of the University of California.

Coincident with the legal decision, persistent reports around the San Francisco peninsula and bay region were to the effect that many theatre operators were planning to suspend cash payments to patent-holders of Bank Night because of the recent Denver decision that Bank Night was not entitled to copyright protection.

Dropped at Mobile

In Mobile, Bank Night has been dropped by the Saenger, Crown and Empire in view of adverse rulings throughout the country affecting Bank Night drawings. A statement issued by the theatres explained the reason for the withdrawal, and said the game may be revived if the Bank Night situation is cleared up.

Independent theatres in Atlanta suspended giveaways pending the evolving of a new method of operation following the recent state decision that the practice violated the lottery laws, and planned to resume them shortly. The Lucas and Jenkins neighborhood circuit, however, suspended the games and donated the accumulated prizes to charity, issuing the statement they would not be revived in any form.

An injunction to restrain T. M. Ellis, Jr., and Gerald A. Turner, exhibitors, from operating Bank Night was being sought by District Attorney John H. Matheson in Beloit. He also was seeking judgment against J. C. Dillon, who the complaint said was the winner of the drawing on December 18th.

The court action by the district attorney's office followed a warning to theatres in Rock county to discontinue Bank Nights, following the ruling of the state's attorney general that they were in violation of the lottery laws.

See Danger to Goodwill

Declaring recent adverse court decisions affecting Bank Night have caused untold confusion, four Jackson, Miss., theatres suspended weekly drawings. "Rather than run the hazard of jeopardizing the confidence and goodwill of our patrons and the public in general, Bank Night drawings will be suspended until such time as the atmosphere has been cleared and the situation thoroughly clarified," an official statement read.

In New Toronto, an industrial municipality close to Toronto, Ontario, the gambling craze among residents became so intense that, on the protest of theatre owners and merchants, Police Chief Hedley Padgett banned Bingo, Keeno and other games of chance sponsored by clubs, churches and alleged charities. The games will be permitted in the future on a restricted basis, it was announced. Theatre managers said that places of amusement paying heavy taxes were deserted when the club and church games were at its unchecked height.

Bank Night Insurance Barred

Insurance companies agreeing to compensate persons whose names are called at theatre Bank Nights in their absence are themselves operating lotteries, Attorney General Mac Q. Williamson of Oklahoma ruled this week in Oklahoma City. He prepared an opinion on the subject at the request of County Attorney Lewis Morris, Oklahoma County, who said several of the companies were in operation, giving "protection for 10 cents."

Attorneys representing theatre men in New Orleans featuring Bank Night and other chance games this week filed appeals to the circuit court of appeals following the decision last week by the circuit court that the games are illegal as they violate the state's lottery laws. As a result of the pending appeals, theatres using the stimulants have discontinued the advertising of the practice although they are still holding the drawings and distributing prize money.

In "Public Domain"

Holding that Bank Night entered public domain when used in theatres and that therefore it may be adopted by others without infringement, the United States circuit court of appeals in Boston Monday threw out the infringement case brought by Bank Night against Meyer Gruber and Harry Bloomberg, operators of Parlay Cash Night. Judges Bingham, Wilson and Morton concurred in this decision.

Monday's decision overturns that of the Boston United States district court from which the case was appealed after that body tossed it out on the ground that the game constituted a lottery. The circuit court cites that Bank Night has been declared not a lottery by the supreme courts of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Iowa, and Tennessee and declares, regarding the finding of the district court that it was a lottery, "we think that the dismissal of the bill of complaint on the ground stated was erroneous."

Bank Night probably will appeal to the supreme court on the ground that the game is a legally privileged publication and therefore has not been placed in the public domain.

TWO GROUPS VIE FOR SUPREMACY IN JAPAN UNDER NEW ALLIANCES

Toho–J. O. Studio–P.C.L.– Nikkatsu Pitted Against Shochiku-Shinko in Distribution and Exhibition of Japanese Films

by H. TOMINAGA
in Tokyo

Abrupt consummation of a distribution agreement between the two big film interests, Nikkatsu and Takarazuka companies, is expected to have widespread reverberations in Japan. The Takarazuka refers to Toho Film Distributing Company, recently established. There had been repeated negotiations for a year between Mr. Negishi, director of Nikkatsu Tokyo Studio, and Mr. Mori, general manager of PCL, who is now director of the newly-established Toho Film Distributing. With the Toho growing in influence, after Takarazuka launched out to identify itself with J. O. Studio and PCL, their negotiations finally developed into gaining access to Nikkatsu, which has now been on the upgrade, holding its own against Shochiku, with which it long has been at feud.

Finally Messrs. Horth and Nagicha and Mr. Inouye, Osaka branch manager of Nikkatsu, met at the Industrial Club, Tokyo, with president Uyemura and general manager Kanazashi of Toho, and Mr. Mori.

By this formation of a quadruple producing-distributing unit, there has developed a new situation of dividing distribution of Japanese pictures into two groups, the one the Toho - J. O. Studio - P.C.L. - Nikkatsu, the other the Shochiku and Shinko companies, which are financially affiliated with each other. Tokyo Hassei, Chiyezo Production and Uzumasa Hassei, three other independent producing companies, decided to go under the banner of Toho-Nikkatsu. Thus the network of the newly incorporated unit covers 700 film theatres—500 of Nikkatsu and 200 of Toho.

The coalition move accounts for a definitely extended scale of production of eight features by Nikkatsu and four by Toho monthly, of using sixteen studio buildings, of which eight belong to Nikkatsu, four to PCL, two to J. O. Studio and two to Chiyezo Production, with a combined personnel of 30 directors and cameramen and 500 players.

Now is expected a furious fight for control between the Toho-Nikkatsu and Shochiku-Shinko combinations.

Aiding Japanese Industry

This concentration into the two groups is considered as lending much to the advancement of the Japanese film industry, as pointed out by President Matsukata and Mr. Mori of Nikkatsu, and by Director Ohhashi of J. O. Studio, who see larger production funds available at each associated studio, and a great opportunity for Nikkatsu to control theatres in six big cities of the country. So, too, Nikkatsu will be enabled to release its product at Nippon Gekijo, belonging to the Toho interests. In other words, Nikkatsu has a first-run outlook at the Marunouchi amusement center in direct competition with Shochiku and other major companies' product.

To fling down the gauntlet to the Toho-Nikkatsu compact, the Shochiku interests are reported to have decided, first of all, to build an extensive amusement quarter, including cinemas, at Tsukiji, Tokyo, comparable with the Marunouchi amusement center where Takarazuka houses have great influence. It was reported that Shochiku planned to construct a five-storied film theatre, seating 2,000, at Tsukiji. It has another theatre in construction in the same quarter. This development will present a striking contrast to the Marunouchi show town, as there are a number of playhouses of the Shochiku circuit, including some half a dozen a few blocks back of Ginza Street, beyond a stream against Marunouchi.

As for foreign film distribution, in the opinion of Mr. Nishimoto, manager of RKO's Japan office, there are misgivings that the local market will be affected to a pretty considerable extent, although not necessarily so in Tokyo.

Air Conditioning Triumph

In the heat of the past summer in Tokyo, the cooling plants convinced the city's major cinemas of their real importance. Air conditioning equipment at the leading film theatres proved their worth at the box offices, holding grosses almost at the normal.

Never had the cinemas with lesser accommodations been so envious of those houses which made capital of their "complete refrigeration." In an effort to meet that competition they went to such lengths as to offer half-price admissions. Other methods adopted to draw patronage included the inauguration of "early morning shows," a special service pass or a discount coupon available for two attendants at a show, issued by the eight leading theatres at Shinjuku, Tokyo. Then there was the 10 sen refund system attempted by Cinema Palace, Kanda. Midnight performances and special shows of outstanding pictures also were given.

Some of our foreign picture distributors are planning to offer a special contract to theatres for the playing of excellent pictures only for extended runs. The management of one local house said that the grosses from the playing of outstanding pictures exclusively at the admission price of 20 sen showed fivefold as much as the grosses obtained from the ordinary programs of a week with the admission fee of 10 sen.

Exhibitors in Japan are indicating a preference for a rental basis for product instead of percentage arrangements. The one exception is the Shinko circuit which seeks percentage terms for all the product it buys. In general, theatres with high average grosses prefer rentals, while producers are demanding percentage terms from the larger houses.

Air Conditioning Keeps Grosses Almost at Normal; Tokyo Chamber Hints Tax Readjustment Move at Hand

The leading Japanese newspapers have reached a high point in the production of newsreels, which in recent months have attained great popularity with Japanese audiences. Asahi, Nichi-nichi and Yomiuri together are producing more than 500,000 feet of newsreel film each month. They are making every effort to extend the market and are planning large studios and laboratories.

Taxation Reform Move

The Tokyo Chamber of Commerce and Industry recently dispatched letters to various film theatres of Tokyo, seeking information for possible reform of taxation systems. Most of our exhibitors have been in such great straits from the hard times that the current rates of show taxes have been protested everywhere.

Joint Purchase Effort

The S-Y and Takarazuka companies, the two leading first-run circuits of foreign pictures in Japan, are reported to be working on an agreement to make possible more economical purchasing of product than under the present system of bidding against each other. Earlier there was a joint declaration to the ten foreign film distributors of Tokyo that they no longer would buy pictures of mediocre rank and quality, whereupon the ten distributors formed a league to confront the joint arrangement of the two circuits.

Apparently the two interests are trying to divide those distributors into two groups in buying their pictures so that the buyers and sellers might make deals within the assigned scope.

It is pointed out that S-Y and Takarazuka have come to a mutual arrangement that "Modern Times" and "Things to Come," coming soon to Japan, shall be released simultaneously at theatres of both circuits.

It is generally believed that S-Y hereafter would plan to buy pictures from Towa Shoji, MGM, Fox and Sanyei-sha, whereas Takarazuka would keep access to Paramount, RKO and Warner. The remaining three, Columbia, Universal and United Artists, are sitting on the fence.

Associated Releasing Twelve in England

Associated Producing and Distributors Company will release 12 pictures this season in England, Norman G. W. Loudon, chairman of the board, announced this week on his arrival in New York from London. Heretofore, the company has been distributing from five to six a year, he said.

Mr. Loudon is also managing director of Sound City Studios and is in America to look over the studios for latest developments, arriving in Hollywood shortly after the first of the year.

THE ELIZABETHAN ERA— And Its New Course of Industry

Wherein Al Lichtman Recounts the Beginnings of Mass Selling of Pictures

by AL LICHTMAN

EVERYONE who knows his motion picture history is thoroughly familiar with the fact that "Queen Elizabeth," the picture sold by the writer, was the first picture put out by the Famous Players Film Company. This organization was not only the forerunner of Paramount Pictures, but also the one with which Adolph Zukor began his great career in the producing and distributing branch of the business. And you might say that with "Queen Elizabeth" was launched the first organized method of distributing important motion pictures.

I had come to the Famous Players Film Company, which owned the rights to this great picture in North America, from Monopol Film Company, which had previously purveyed on a state-rights basis. Two of the first classics of multiple-length features to reach the screen were "Dante's Inferno" and "Homer's Odyssey," both of which were made in Italy. Through my experience with these two pictures, I had sensed the desire on the part of the public, as well as the trade, for better pictures. When the announcement came of the formation of Famous Players Film Company, a company that had associated with it the illustrious name of Daniel Frohman, and an announced purpose to dedicate its efforts toward the production and distribution of only well known plays, with the world's greatest stage stars acting leading roles, I felt that at last here was a concern that had faith in the future of the motion picture. And, when I was given the opportunity by Adolph Zukor to join it and become its first sales manager, I grasped the opportunity.. It was thus that I undertook the exploitation of "Queen Elizabeth."

There was considerable debate as to how this picture should be marketed. The Frohman contingent of the company argued for roadshowing it as they did their legitimate shows. This method was tried but it was not successful.

Then we tried the Monopol method of state-rights and in short order we succeeded in selling the entire country except a couple of states.

Shortly thereafter we produced "The Count of Monte Cristo," with James O'Neill in the starring role. This picture was tied up in litigation, so that our second release was "The Prisoner of Zenda," starring the then very popular stage star, James K. Hackett. This picture was sold by the writer to the same independent exchanges as those which purchased the rights to "Queen Elizabeth."

APEDA, New York

AL LICHTMAN, when he was general manager of distribution for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

HOWEVER, as great as these two pictures were, the buyers complained of their inability to make money with them. I was rather puzzled by the situation and for the purpose of determining the actual marketing conditions with these better pictures, Mr. Zukor permitted me to open a small office in Pittsburgh. From this central point I distributed "Queen Elizabeth" and "The Prisoner of Zenda" throughout the State of Ohio and the western part of Pennsylvania.

Through this experiment we learned that the overhead of marketing one picture at a time was too great. Furthermore, a feature picture, even at the top price of $50 a day, was too much for the average theatre exhibitor to pay. All the theatres at that time were compelled to purchase their "regular" pictures by the week, so many reels a week for so much money, depending upon the age of the pictures. Pictures were chiefly obtained from the General Film Company, which sold better than 80 per cent of the pictures in use at that time.

WE also found that the admission prices then prevailing were for the most part 5 cents and 10 cents, which was too low to permit the exhibitor to pay the rentals required for these better pictures.

So when I was ordered to return to New York to launch the sale of "The Count of Monte Cristo" on a straight-line basis, I disclosed the results of my experiment to Mr. Zukor and prevailed upon him not to continue the sale of one picture at a time. Instead we decided we must undertake to produce fifty-two pictures a year to be marketed at one time to the exchanges, they in turn to market them under one annual contract to the theatres. Exhibitors in the big cities would have to be prevailed upon to show the better pictures for a full week at higher admission prices than theretofore charged. Exhibitors in the little towns and the subsequent runs in the big cities would have to set aside at least one night a week, to be known as "feature night," and they too would have to charge a higher admission price to support the better pictures.

Mr. Zukor saw the idea immediately, but we had considerable difficulty and it took considerable time to convince others in the company that this was a practical plan.

EXCHANGE men, for the most part, those who bought "Queen Elizabeth" and subsequently "The Prisoner of Zenda," grasped the plan quickly and thus the foundation of Paramount Pictures (and in fact the entire industry as it is now constituted) was begun. The plan proved a huge success and the following year Paramount Pictures was organized and started its long illustrious career with the release of two motion pictures per week.

Closely after this organization, all the other big companies now in existence followed and for the most part changed their policy shortly thereafter.

So that even more important than the fact that "Queen Elizabeth" was the film which inaugurated the great career of Adolph Zukor, "Queen Elizabeth" must in my memory stand as a picture which played an all-important part in changing the course of our industry.

"Queen Elizabeth"—As It Might Have Been Reviewed In 1912

by GUS McCARTHY

General audience classification—No Code Certificate. To be distributed by Famous Players organized by Adolph Zukor. Produced in Paris, France, by Louis Marcathon. Running time, 35 minutes.

With the famous Sarah Bernhardt and the well-known American actor in the leading roles, "Queen Elizabeth" is the screen conception of historical romantic drama that actually gives credence to the fantastically enthusiastic predictions of its adherents that moving pictures will one day become a great entertainment medium. Undoubtedly the most striking departure made in this film, and a feature that sets it distinctively apart from any of its predecessors, is the fact that it essays to and really succeeds in telling a story.

The story concerns a chapter in the romantic life of England's colorful Queen Elizabeth. It tells of a powerful woman whose every wish is a command and every whim an order. Surrounded by a court of flattering admirers, she elects to give her heart and love to the Earl of Essex. Investing him with great honors, elevating him to a high post in her government, Essex, however, is unable to resist the temptations of the world in which he finds himself. His indiscretions becoming known to Elizabeth, the intrigues of courtiers making sure that Essex is shown in the worst possible light, Elizabeth decrees his death. Then as the great dream of every woman, happy love, is denied Elizabeth she succumbs to heartbreak.

First of the prominent stage artists to hazard an appearance on the screen, Miss Bernhardt gives a realistic and convincing performance. Similarly Mr. Tellegen acts with understanding and charm. It is rather unfortunate that there is no means of identifying other characters in the film. However, it is not beyond the realm of reason to predict that the work of the cast will create a deep impression on audiences.

Undoubtedly the future success of moving pictures rests in its ability to present well-known theatrical names in its experiments. Likewise to prove the contentions of its sponsors that the screen will, in time to come, eliminate the stage, pictures must tell stories. From what we have seen to date and particularly as demonstrated by "Queen Elizabeth," the screen is an entertainment medium of unlimited possibilities.

Mr. Adolph Zukor, who purchased the rights to show the film in this country from its French producer, M. Louis Marcathon, is enthusiastically optimistic as to the future of films. He predicts that not only will the great stars of the legitimate, concert and opera stage be eager to appear in pictures, but that the pictures will develop personalities of their own whose names will be household words every place in the world. He visions that great theatres will be built in which nothing but moving pictures will be shown.

Considering the tremendous advances that have been made in the world of science and mechanics during the early years of this century, it is not illogical to assume that Mr. Zukor is indulging in something more than a dream. Maybe he's in on the ground floor of a vast business that will revolutionize the customs, habits and modes of living of the whole world. If those who present moving pictures to the public could only become inoculated with a little bit of his enthusiasm and in turn transmit the feeling to their customers, it is quite likely they will profit handsomely with the engagement of "Queen Elizabeth."

Scroll Received

One of the many testimonials and scrolls already received for presentation at the dinner came from London this week. It is a scroll of parchment signed by 63 active members of the Cinema Veterans, congratulating Mr. Zukor. The scroll was signed at a reunion of the British film organization, which includes among its members some who were active in motion picture research work before actual production was started. The inscription reads:

"To Adolph Zukor, we, the members of the Cinema Veterans (1903) meeting today, December 7, 1936, at the Trocadero Restaurant, Piccadilly, London, for our 13th annual reunion, send our sincere congratulations and good wishes on the attainment of your Silver Jubilee."

Players Captain Districts

Fourteen of the Paramount studio's contract players volunteered their services as honorary captains of various sales districts during the Silver Jubilee Drive. At a recent luncheon at the studio the players made known their plans through Bob Burns, who is captain at large and spokesman for the group. The players and their territories are:

District No. 1, Boston, Ray Milland; No. 2, New York, Lynne Overman; No. 3, Philadelphia, Marsha Hunt; No. 4, Cleveland, Eleanore Whitney; No. 5, Chicago, William Frawley; No. 6, Kansas City, Roscoe Karns; No. 7, Atlanta, Gail Patrick; No. 8, Denver, Martha Raye; No. 9, Los Angeles, Shirley Ross; No. 11, Minneapolis, Mary Carlisle; No. 12, Dallas, Dorothy Lamour, and both districts in Canada captained by Sir Guy Standing and Robert Cummings.

Hitler's Ban on Criticism of Arts Also Applies to American Films

by J. K. RUTENBERG

in Berlin

American motion pictures imported into Germany will in the future be free of press criticism. The recent decree of Adolph Hitler, issued through his Reich minister of propaganda, Dr. Joseph Goebbels, eliminates completely all critics and criticisms of all motion pictures, drama, literature, or any work of art. The critics will be supplanted by "reporters," and critiques of whatever kind will be succeeded by "descriptions" and "appreciations."

In recent years it often has been the case that films, stage performances and other cultural media have been reviewed by young men bare of the cultural knowledges, of the experiences which are essential for the review. The new provision leaves the judgment of the art work open to personal inspection. The review, therefore, shall be more a general treatment, an impartial review instead of a critique in the common sense of the word. A reviewer hereafter must be 30 years of age at least to be admitted to the critique.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES . . . On a Silver Jubilee

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

SITTING in an adjoining place at next Thursday's Adolph Zukor "Silver Jubilee" banquet, in Hollywood, will be a person whose presence will probably stir in Mr. Zukor's mind the most poignant memories of all. He is Frank Meyer, still in Mr. Zukor's employ, serving for these 25 years.

Mr. Meyer started the other day from his desk at Paramount's home office on Broadway to the banquet in California, with a still vivid remembrance of a fall day in 1915, when all that Mr. Zukor owned, and all that which meant the continuance of his three-year-old Famous Players Film Company, reposed in a vault in a blazing fire.

Frank Meyer, first Zukor film cutter and all-around mechanic of the first Famous Players, had been placed in charge of the company's "fireproof" safe. In order to relieve the safe's weight on the rickety old wooden floor of the company's first film studio, on New York's East 26th Street, Mr. Meyer had contrived a contraption whereby the bulk of steel was affixed to the brick wall of the building by two thick steel straps. On September 11, 1915, the various players, stage-hands and other studio workers had departed for home, as usual, at six o'clock. That night, "Packy" McFarland was fighting Mike Gibbons, and Mr. Zukor, with young son Eugene, decided to take a night off for a ringside seat at the battle. Frank, however, had decided to stay on for a particularly urgent job of film-cutting.

Meyer had been sitting amidst heaps of precious finished negative—sole copies, for none had been printed—when he felt a choking sensation in his throat and almost at the same instant heard a fire alarm. He ran to the stairs and perceived that the braid factory on the floor below was a raging furnace. Running back, he gathered up all of the negatives from the floor, his table, the racks and elsewhere and tossed them into the wall safe, slamming the heavy door behind him as he ran for an exit to the roof and safety. He mounted a ladder and climbed to the hatchment, the while flames touched the trousers behind him. He jumped to a lower building next door and scurried down its fire-escape, taking on the way a thorough drenching from a fire hose. It was a chilly night, and so Meyer taxi-cabbed home for a quick change of clothes.

Meantime, before fight-time, Adolph Zukor, his son and his kinsfolk, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Shauer, took dinner at the old Knickerbocker Grill at Times Square. As they approached the Zukor car at the door, Zukor saw a blaze in the skies. "Quite a fire," he remarked. "Yes," responded a policeman, "it's a general alarm—a motion picture studio is in flames on 26th Street!"

When Frank Meyer returned to the scene in dry clothes, he found Adolph Zukor walking up and down the still-burning building, frankly and openly in tears. And when Zukor saw Meyer he literally fell on his neck in a faint. They had all given him up for dead, along with the destruction of the precious negatives.

That safe held the whole stock-in-trade of Famous Players, principally in the nature of three fresh, unprinted and uninsured feature negatives. Experts called to the scene to relieve the anxiety refused to predict whether the safe was sufficient protection against the flames and heat for the highly inflammable film which it contained. Fireproof for papers—yes. But the celluloid, heated to a certain degree, might have exploded. Much, too, depended on whether the wall had held. If it had fallen, dropping the safe into the furnace below, the chances were slim. Had Mr. Meyer gotten all of the negatives into the vault? Had he closed the door tightly? When he closed the door, had he thrown in the combination to lock it? If not, it all looked doubtful, including the immediate future both of Mr. Zukor and his Famous Players Film Company. Meyer, rack his brains as he might for recollections of his actions in the two crowded moments after discovering the fire, could not be sure.

The wall held up. But even when the last embers of the fire died out, Mr. Zukor and his associates could not be certain. They must wait, the experts advised, until the shell of the safe had cooled off. Otherwise, the film—if it still existed—might take fire from a burst of hot air. While awaiting the crucial hour, Mr. Zukor moved his studio workers into a nearby stable to continue filming. Then came the time for the vault's inspection. Virtually all of the Famous Players Film Company stood around and watched Frank Meyer seize the handle. He turned toward them a pale, appalled face. "Boss," he choked, "I'm sorry. I closed the door, but I didn't throw in the combination to lock it."

"Well, open it! Open it!" exclaimed Zukor.

Meyer jerked at the door. Instead of powder and ashes, they saw the negatives—unharmed. It was Adolph Zukor's first ardent flirtation with disaster.

The occasion of Adolph Zukor's 25th anniversary in motion pictures as head of the Paramount company, also marks his 64th birthday, on January 7th; the 40th anniversary of his marriage, on January 10th, to Lottie Kaufman, of and in Chicago, and the 49th anniversary of his arrival at Castle Garden in New York harbor, on the leaky old boat, Russia, from his native Hungary, a penniless orphan boy of 15, with Horatio Alger ideas and not a word of English.

Contrary to prevailing opinion, it was W. W. Hodkinson, early Famous Players distribution executive, and not Adolph Zukor, who hit on the name of Paramount and gave it, in memory of his own western film beginnings, the trademark device of the mountain-peak surrounded by stars. Mr. Hodkinson named the company Paramount after an apartment house sign that he had seen that morning on the way to his office.

IT TOOK Adolph Zukor 25 years to become an actual producer of motion pictures.

When Zukor opened the way, some 25 to 30 years ago, for the beginning of much of the motion picture industry as it is presently constituted, he had thought of himself as a producer—a glorified super-director over all the directors and producers on a lot. But the sudden expansion of the whole industry between 1912 and 1920 brought a series of financial crises and demands which caused Mr. Zukor to refrain from actual production and instead continue at the business helm of his company. His present position, then, as chairman of the board of Paramount in complete charge of production in Hollywood, has more sentiment attached to it than appears on the surface.

Mr. Zukor's very first schooling in actual production came with the aid of a book he had read when he was learning English in New York, as a boy. He had been studying "Pilgrim's Progress." It became his favorite English classic. He still kept his old, thumbed school-copy, and in the years just before 1912, when he was full of the idea that the long film was on its way, he set out to equip himself as a producer. Part of the self-imposed training consisted of making a series of scenarios of "Pilgrim's Progress." This apprentice work will of course never see the lights of a motion picture studio. The theme is not suited. But the ideas they gave him taught him that production was to his liking.

In 1903, Adolph Zukor, a capable and modestly successful furrier in Chicago, decided that he would go down to New York to see what could be done about the plight of a friend to whom he had loaned $3,000 to go into the penny arcade business. The penny arcade, located at Sixth Avenue and 14th Street, did not seem to be prospering. The effort to salvage at least part of the loan put Adolph Zukor into the penny arcade, got him into association with the late Marcus Loew, who was similarly interested, led to the acquisition of the William Brady "Hale's Tours," and converted the arcades into motion picture store shows. By 1906 Zukor was a full-fledged theatre proprietor, with the Comedy Theatre presenting the best motion pictures he could find to the amusement seeking crowds of New York's carnival 14th Street. Zukor had started out to rescue a bad loan and had found a new career.

Adolph Zukor felt he was making theatrical progress when he left the penny arcade business, just 31 years ago, to run "Hale's Tours" for William A. Brady. This was a stunt in entertainment which blossomed and died even as miniature golf. The spectator spent ten cents to ride in a rickety property railway carriage which bumped and jiggled in imitation of a real train. At one end stood an observation platform fronting a screen on which ran a short film showing the ascent of the Rocky Mountains, the Alps and the blue Alsatians. The idea was to cause the spectator to feel he was riding to the skies. The Zukor-Brady combination installed "Hale's Tours" in Union Square, in Newark, Boston and Pittsburgh. A month or so of bonanza returns; then a crash. The public would not take to the short travel reels.

At about that time Edwin S. Porter's "Great Train Robbery" came along, and Mr. Zukor bought it. It ran a full 12 minutes and actually told a story. Eventually Zukor dropped the trick railway and made his establishments humble motion picture "palaces." In two years the newly-constituted "Hale's Tours" paid its first dividend and had an $80,000 deficit off the books.

Adolph Zukor's odd family name stands almost alone among the 515,000 name listings in New York's telephone directory. Besides his own, and that of his son—Eugene James—there is only one other Zukor among all the half-million telephone subscribers, and that belongs to a Zukor dressmaker on Seventh Avenue.

Not another Zukor, besides that of Adolph, in all of America's 130,000,000 inhabitants, achieves the distinction of recognition in the current "Who's Who in America."

The entrance of Adolph Zukor into motion pictures came after a unique diversification of labor in search of a career. At first, while still in Hungary, he was well on the way to becoming a rabbi, as had been most of the sons in his mother's family. Adolph's uncle, Kalman Lieberman, a rabbi in the neighboring town of Szalka, intended to consecrate Adolph and his brother, Arthur, to the service of religion. That worked out in the case of the more articulate Arthur, who became one of the most eloquent rabbis of Berlin and a notable scholar.

Adolph Zukor's very first motion picture distributing project was called the Engadine Corporation, formed with Joseph Engel and Edwin S. Porter to purchase the American rights to "Queen Elizabeth" for $18,000. In four reels, it was the first feature-length production to be shown in this country, coming from the Paris studios of Louis Mercanton, with Sarah Bernhardt in the title role. The $80,000 return on the Bernhardt picture prompted Zukor's policy of "famous players in famous plays"—and thus Famous Players and Paramount.

In the 16 years spanning his arrival in New York as an emigrant and his association with amusements through the penny-arcade business, in 1904, with the late Mitchell Mark, Mr. Zukor traveled from the hardware business to upholstery to the business of a manufacturing furrier, carrying his Novelty Fur Company, of Chicago, first to a $9,000 bank balance, then, in a slack season, to a crash.

Adolph Zukor's founding of Famous Players did not take place until 1912, eight years after he had met Mitchell Mark and their penny arcade. This year of 1937, then, while marking the 25th anniversary of Mr. Zukor in Famous Players-Paramount, really is the 31st anniversary of Mr. Zukor's actual theatrical beginning.

In-between his various travels in commercial enterprise he delved a bit into prize-fighting, a career which terminated with an opponent's delivery of a cauliflower ear.

On New Year's Day, in 1916, Mary Pickford and Adolph Zukor had a chat. The subject was salary. Mary was Zukor's reigning box office belle at Famous Players, with five years of actual screen experience to her credit. She had been getting $2,000 a week—a staggering sum. Mr. Zukor and Mary agreed to a new contract at $4,000—$208,000 a year!

In February the exciting announcement was made that John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation had contracted to pay Charles Chaplin $670,000—$12,885 a week for 52 weeks work. That upset the Zukor scheme for Mary Pickford.

Mary concluded that she had been in the films five industrious years before Chaplin started. Now she was getting a mere $4,000 a week while this stranger helped himself to three times as much. Here and now was a head-on collision between that Chaplin contract and Mary's pride. And Adolph Zukor was in the middle.

Noting the dissension, Mary was immediately the target for ambitious offers from practically the whole industry. Mutual made her an offer. So did the American Tobacco Company, which was seething with millions and motion picture ambitions. And still the offers continued—from William Randolph Hearst, Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph, et al.

Then, on June 24, 1916, Zukor's worries over losing Mary ended when she again signed with his Famous Players. The new contract called for a guaranty of $1,040,000 for two years work. In addition there was a bonus of $300,000 for signing. Also, it was agreed that her name was to be in the biggest type and the only featured name in any advertisement of her pictures—unprecedented treatment in those days. She was guaranteed parlor car transportation for herself and her mother to and from California and a motor car for services outside Greater New York. Zukor also agreed to provide a whole studio to be known as the Mary Pickford studio, in which no other pictures could be made, and in the event Mary made winter pictures in California, she was to have a whole stage in Hollywood for herself. Too, she was to have a voice in the choice of stories, casts and everything else. And just by way of completeness, Mary under this contract collected an additional $40,000 for the time between May 29th and June 24th, when she had not been on the Zukor payroll.

The Chaplin contract with Freuler raised Mary's bill for services to Mr. Zukor from $4,000 a week to well over $11,000 a week, plus the transportation costs and additional studio expense, probably representing a total of $15,000 a week. And that was 20 years ago!

In 1913, one year after Adolph Zukor started Famous Players on its then thinly-budgeted scale of operations, word got around that David Wark Griffith, pioneer director and peer of the early Biograph film makers, had become discontented with his lot. Adolph Zukor was enthusiastically interested in Griffith's work. Famous Players needed more talent.

There was grave alarm in the Times Square offices of Famous Players when Zukor announced that he had offered Griffith a salary of $50,000 a year to direct for the company.

Daniel Frohman, then a Zukor associate, was now certain that the head of the company had lost his reason. The Famous Players concern did not have $50,000. Furthermore the company was not worth that much.

To the re-amazement and relief of Zukor's associates, this Griffith person had the colossal nerve to reject the offer.

Twelve years later, in 1925, Famous Players employed Griffith at the rate of $156,000 a year—$3,000 a week.

Adolph Zukor was anxious for the development of the feature picture idea in the mind of the public and the amusement world. He, probably more than anyone else in the pioneering days of a quarter-century ago, predicted and furthered the idea of pictures of as long as three and four reels to supplant the one-reelers then in vogue. He employed C. F. (Zit) Zittel, then connected with the New York Evening Journal, to tell the story in press agentry. Mr. Zittel literally flooded the dramatic and motion picture trade papers with the big-feature idea and with big photographs of Zukor. The success of the campaign—one of the motion picture's very first "big time" exploitations—was proven when Arthur Brisbane, despite his then deep-dyed dislike of the motion picture, editorialized in Hearst's Journal with a warning to the stage magnates of Broadway that Zukor—and, therefore, the motion picture—was a serious invader in the amusement world. The motion picture has made some progress since then. They buried Brisbane last Monday.

Few, if any, will remember that even before Famous Players, when Adolph Zukor was working at the Marcus Loew Enterprises, a mixture of screen and vaudeville theatres, the office staff called him "Creepy," because he was quiet.

Mort Singer to Head Pool in Minneapolis

Mort H. Singer, former Twin City theatre manager and head of a large circuit operating throughout the midwestern states, will head the committee operating the six Loop theatres merged by a partnership agreement between the Singer Minneapolis Company and the Minnesota Amusement Company in Minneapolis.

The operating partnership disclosed by John J. Friedl, president of the Minnesota Company, will pool the Minnesota, Orpheum, State, Lyric, Century and Aster. The Orpheum and the Minnesota will continue to show Class "A" product. No policy for the other four houses has yet been determined.

Striking Dock Workers Insist on Union Workers

Striking dock workers in the Los Angeles area have served notice on all studios that companies working on waterfront locations will be declared unfair unless they employ union workers. The demand that film employees possess American Federation of Labor membership cards is reported to include actors as well as technical workers and teamsters.

Remains As Agency Scout

Bob Goldstein, who operates Superior Radio Artists, Inc., will continue as one of the chief talent scouts for Blackett-Semple and Hummert, Inc., according to Frank Hummert, vice-president. The advertising agency spends about $30,000 a week on radio shows on behalf of its clients.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Production

Although production elected to practically shut down activities on last Wednesday in order that Christmas holidays might be properly celebrated, a surprisingly large number of films were started during the first three days of the week. Quite to the astonishment of players and production crews, seven new features went into work. However, the pace that was expected for the period is noted on the other side of the ledger, where only four pictures were completed.

Paramount was either the most optimistic or ambitious studio. There were three pictures started. In "Murder Goes To College," Charlie Ruggles, Lynne Overman, Mary Carlisle, Colin Tapley, Harvey Stephens and Ruth Coleman will be seen. The cast of "Waikiki Wedding," which Frank Tuttle directs, features Bing Crosby, Bob Burns, Martha Raye, Shirley Ross, George Barbier, Leif Erikson and Grady Sutton. "The Love Trap," a B. P. Schulberg production, will present Gail Patrick, Ricardo Cortez and Dorothy Peterson in the principal roles. Edward Ludwig is directing.

"Time Out For Romance" was started at Twentieth Century-Fox. The cast includes Claire Trevor, Michael Whalen, William Demarest, Benny Bartlett, Joan Davis, Lelah Taylor, Douglas Fowley and Chick Chandler. Malcolm St. Clair is directing.

Adhering to its definite schedule of at least one new picture a week, Republic started "Paradise Express." The cast features Grant Withers, Maude Eburne, Donald Kirke, Arthur Hoyt, Budd Fine, Dorothy Appleby, Harry Davenport, Arthur Loft and John Holland. Joseph Kane is directing.

At Columbia "Racketeers In Exile" went before the cameras. Names in the cast are George Bancroft, Evelyn Venable, Wynne Gibson, John Gallaudet, George McKay, Marc Lawrence and Helen Lowell. Directing was assigned to Erle Kenton.

MGM started "Espionage." Edmund Lowe, Madge Evans, Stuart Irwin and Charles Williams are the leading players. Kurt Neumann directs.

Universal alone among the studios completed two pictures. "Left Handed Law," a Buck Jones production which Les Selander directed, features Jones, Noel Francis, Robert Frazier, George Regas and Frank LaRue. The second film, "Breezing Home," formerly titled "I Hate Horses," will present William Gargan, Wendy Barry, Binney Barnes, Cesare Romero, Raymond Walburn and Willie Best. Milton Carruth directed.

Columbia's contribution to the finished work was "Raiding Guns." Charles Starrett and Peggy Stratford are featured, supported by Charles Middleton, Ed LeSaint and Ted Oliver. Leon Barsha directed.

For RKO-Radio distribution, Hirliman Productions finished "Park Avenue Logger." George O'Brien and Beatrice Roberts are starred, supported by Bert Hanlon, Gertrude Short, Willard Robertson, Ward Bond, and Robert Emmett O'Connor. David Howard directed.

PICTURES IMPROVED, DECLARES EDUCATOR

"Motion pictures are improving, there is no doubt about that. The boy-meets-girl themes are not as thin as they used to be," declared Professor Edgar Dale, associate of the bureau of educational research at Ohio State University, this week.

Professor Dale, who wrote a book on the appreciation of the motion picture and who was one of the witnesses before the Geneva hearing on the world's film industry, added that "the motion picture voice of the motion picture consumer finally has reached Hollywood."

Garnett Reports

Slangy and unsubtle is Tay Garnett in reporting observations made on his world cruise, a journey which brought him, he says, "face to face with a condition which heaped shame and humiliation on my brow." To quote the producer directly:

"The world is picture nutty. For a long time the far off countries have been setups for the American film peddler. It's been so soft for our people in these far off places that they've taken orders but they haven't done much selling. The revenues grabbed out of some of these spots have been considered hardly worth the effort, but there is a lot more dough to be grabbed than the take today would indicate. America makes the finest pictures in the world and they are shown every place where there's a theatre manager brazen enough to insist that American salesmen sell them their pictures. Do you think I'm kiddin'?

"In Japan today there are a number of picture studios, modern in building, method, and equipment, and they are knocking out product for Japanese consumption that is not too bad. The Japanese have made plenty of money with their product on their home grounds and are now figuring on world expansion. If we had been selling our product, a superior product, as we should have, the Japanese companies might not have made so much money on their home grounds. Now they are importing foreign directors — Dr. Arnold Fank, of German picture fame, is the latest importation.

"In China it's the same story again. Here the picture manufacturers are mainly third-rate American sharpshooters, unaided by a systematic Government cooperation such as is given the Japanese enterprises, but (and with make-shift equipment) they are making pictures, peddling them to the Chinese, and most of them don't have to bother to buy any red ink.

"In the Malay Peninsula I met a guy who had been an American film salesman for one of our majors in the East, who began canning Malay dramas at about a buck and a half a foot. With the first of these masterpieces under his arm, he barnstormed through Malaysia; north as far as Siam, south through Borneo, Sumatra, and Java. It was a little over three years ago that this bird completed his first contribution to Malay art. When he barnstormed, his pictures were run in grocery stores, trading posts, churches and temples, or outdoors under the palm trees between showers. He only collected coppers, and I hear tell he did not bar buttons, if they were in reasonably good shape. But he got into all of the corners, and today this same gent owns quite a chain of theatres throughout this territory. He has upped his budget to a couple of bucks a foot, and he is grinding out miles of it.

"In India there are an amazing number of picture producing outfits. The pictures are not good, but they are long and loud—an Indian wants quantity for his dough. But the whole point is, and I got this from the guy who owns the horse, the head of Agfa in Bombay, there is more negative raw stock consumed annually in India than in any other country in the world, up to and including.

"In Egypt, as far as I know, there is only one small studio, but it is new and as modern as tomorrow morning's paper. And it is busy all the time.

"You don't suppose it's possible, do you, that while our boys have been howling at the producers, they have been overlooking a couple of bets in their own department.

"I had an opportunity to express these thoughts to one of the head guys—a guy in charge of the Far East territory for one of the majors. Having heard my beef, he fixed me with a beady eye (just like a supervisor) and said:

" 'Mr. Garnett, these fellows out here in the outlying districts get coppers for admission. Our company is not in the five and dime business.'

"The coppers that this bird referred to are what's paying for all this negative that's being used out there. Maybe we are not in the 'five and dime' business, but I seem to remember the day when picture houses were known as 'nickelodeons'—they were shooting galleries, bowling alleys, and empty grocery stores, and you could catch a load of Arthur Johnson or Francis X. Bushman at a jitney a look. And, unless I'm further mistaken (and don't make any book that I am), those shooting galleries were the foundation of our present giant industry."

BROADCASTERS GET BLESSINGS AND BLOWS

Educators at Washington Meeting Hear Sarnoff Warning Against Forced Discipline

by FRANCIS L. BURT

in Washington

Alternately criticizing and praising broadcasting, ridiculing the exaggeratedly meticulous speech of announcers which, it was declared, has had little effect in promoting the use of better English among the public, and crediting radio with having eliminated the bombastic, "rabble rousing," "flag waving" demogogue, educators throughout the country and broadcasting officials met with Government leaders in Washington last week to discuss the educational field of radio.

Adoption of a code of fair practices by the industry was urged by Prof. Arthur N. Holcombe of Harvard University, while French Ambassador Laboulaye offered a plea for the greater use of radio to bring about a better understanding between nations, and E. N. Nockels of Station WCFL (organized labor), Chicago, held out a threat of federal action in the event of monopoly.

Development of a "university of the air" was recommended by Harold L. Ickes, secretary of the interior, at the opening session of the conference. But, he warned, mass education, by radio or otherwise, holds a real danger of standardization and regimentation which would menace individuality of thought and action.

New Government Station

Because of the interest of the Government in education by radio, the new Department of the Interior Building, nearing completion, will contain a modern, fully-equipped studio for broadcasting, the first to be incorporated in a federal building, over which the Office of Education may some day offer educational programs, probably to be distributed by the national network organizations, the secretary revealed.

Scarcity of frequencies and the relatively high cost of broadcasting stand in the way of full freedom of the air, according to Professor Holcombe. Thus, he said, the educator is more or less at the mercy of the station operator when he seeks to secure time.

"Up to now," he explained, "the managements of the great chains have generally shown a sound discretion in the exercise of their editorial judgment concerning broadcasting material. They have recognized that they are in a sense trustees for the public, and not merely the managers of private profit-seeking businesses.

"The same, unfortunately, cannot always be said for the proprietors of local stations. But the leaders of the broadcasting industry have not been unmindful of their public obligations. They have fairly won the opportunity to continue in the management of the industry."

Warning the educators that they must exercise care in the treatment of their material and not accept an arbitrary attitude toward the public, Professor Holcombe pointed out that in the recent campaign, President Roosevelt's opponents, by overuse of radio, probably did their cause more harm than good, while Father Coughlin learned that radio could not enable him to dictate to voters.

Dangers Seen

The freedom and variety of American broadcasting programs are due, to a large extent, "to the same commercial system which must also take credit for a vast amount of stupidity and dullness," the conference was told by Gilbert Seldes, author. More care in the making of programs was demanded by Pierre V. R. Key, editor of Musical Digest.

Fears that the educators would find their efforts in vain and their work taken away from them should radio education become popular were voiced by Mr. Nockels, who told the conference that "there lies ahead of us a definite danger of an attempt on the part of the same type of broadcasters who have heretofore endeavored to obtain a strangle hold on the channels of the air to extend their monopolistic attempts to include educational broadcasting, and to so control it as to appropriate its benefits in the way of increased and constant listening audiences to their own selfish gain."

Sarnoff Is Speaker

Assurances of interest were presented to the conference in a concluding address by David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America.

"The ultimate aims of educators and broadcasters are identical," he said. "Both desire to see American standards of education and culture raised to the higfhest possible level; both recognize the power of radio broadcasting as a means to that end."

"Radio programs can be created to inform the mind and elevate the spirit," he said in urging cooperation between broadcasters and educators in outlining any definite program, "but when one seeks to impose upon them the requirements that they also furnish mental discipline and training, one narrows their appeal and risks the dispersion of the invisible audience, thereby defeating the very purpose for which the program was prepared."

The matter of federal control of radio and of censorship of the air is being discussed with increasing frequency and emphasis. The American Civil Liberties Union, long active in guarding the freedom of the press and of the motion picture screen is distributing a pamphlet urging the enactment of legislation to make free time mandatory for radio stations. The proposed legislation requires all stations to set aside regular periods "for uncensored discussion on a non-profit basis of public, social, political and economic problems and for educational purposes." It also requires that every station presenting a controversial issue must give at least one opposing view.

Films in New Color Shown

Three selected subjects employing the new Keller-Dorian color were screened in the Music Hall projection room in Rockefeller Centre, New York, this week. The three subjects selected for the demonstration were "La Beguine," produced by Paramount in its Paris studio; the overture from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman," and a single reel of camera subjects selected at random.

The first reel employs Kodacloro, a Keller-Dorian process adapted especially for 16mm use. Two Martinique native dances, one a solo and the other by a dance team, are presented against a simple stage setting. The color, in its consequence, does not involve variable subjects, being confined to facial and costume features, which are uniformly clear and authentic, Sherwin Kane reported in Motion Picture Daily.

The Keller-Dorian process probably achieves its best effects in blue and shades of blue and in flesh tints in closeups, he continues. These appeared to best advantage in the demonstration subjects and were the most often utilized. In distance shots facial outlines are no more clearly defined than they are in other color processes. Sponsors of the Keller-Dorian color, however, claim that no makeup is required for photographing with their process and assert as well that the projection machine used for the demonstration was not specialy equipped for the showing.

With the color results on the screen comparing favorably with other color systems now in use, the outstanding advantage of Keller-Dorian color would appear to be centered upon the economies claimed for it. Its makers assert that color negative costs are as much as 80 per cent less with Keller-Dorian; that print costs are about two-thirds less; that rushes are available on approximately the same time basis as for black and white, and that it requires a minimum of extra equipment for camera and projection machines. A wide shutter for cameras and a filter for projection machines are said to be the only essential basic extras required in the use of the process.

Interstate Checking Adopted By Five Film Companies

Interstate Checking Service is now checking a number of theatres for Universal, United Artists, and Grand National. Alliance and Tobis-America are also on the company's lists. Negotiations are pending with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Warner Brothers, Paramount and RKO according to Charles Schwerin, in charge of the New York office.

Toll Directing Publicity

Lionel Toll has been appointed publicity director of the Independent Theatre Owners Association in New York. He will also edit The Independent, the organization's official publication.

Edward Kleine Moves

Edward Kleine, head of the Bay State Film Exchange in Boston, has moved his offices to the building formerly occupied by Cameo Exchange.

Way Out West

(MGM - Hal Roach)

Comedy

Here's an entertainment Christmas present appropriate for any time in the year. The amusement provided is nothing but unalloyed nonsensical foolishness. It blends the best pantomime technical values of the silent days with the modern idea of fun making. It gives Laurel and Hardy full opportunity to present their full talents in a way that causes continual laughter while they are on the screen. It further permits them to introduce quite a bit of uptodate novelty; once in a swing dance and twice as song birds, rendering "On the Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and "I Want to Be in Dixie."

From an analytical standpoint, the story provided for the fun makers isn't anything that will set the world afire. It's just a vehicle on which they can hang a lot of gagging, stunting and be artistically clownish as they indulge in a potpourri of hilarious farce. The pace is rapid fire. There are no letdowns in the round of merriment for audiences who like to laugh.

In the yarn, such as it is as a story, Laurel and Hardy are entrusted to deliver to orphan slavey Mary Roberts the deed to a gold mine. By mistake, they hand the papers to Lola Marcel, sirenish dance hall singer. The melee incidental to their attempt to recover the papers is a riot of slapstick, chase-'em-around nonsense, in which the heroes lose the verdict. Then, in the second ridiculous chapter, Stan and Ollie set out to steal the papers from the safe in which they are locked. They plan to do so quietly, but the ensuing din and clamor as they get into all sorts of messes would wake the dead. Eventually, when everybody is just about limp from giggling and guffawing, they hand the papers to Mary and get her out of the clutches of Lola and Mickey Finn.

Wholesome fun in every way, a film full of glee for the youngsters wild with glee, it is also one for real pleasure for grownups.

The Plough and the Stars

(Radio)

Romantic Drama

In many ways there are qualities in this picture which will forcefully recommend it to audience and exhibitor attention. At the same time, it is that type of entertainment that requires intensive and intelligent selling. Like "The Informer," "The Plough and the Stars" is an adaptation of a Sean O'Casey story and play, prepared for the screen by Dudley Nichols and directed by John Ford. And the experience gained in presenting "The Informer" should be beneficial in getting this picture off to the auspicious start immediately that its merits as entertainment entitle it to.

Briefly "The Plough and the Stars" is another Irish Uprising story. It is exceptionally well produced, acted and directed. The class of its settings, unusual method of lighting the sets, of the players and the quality of camera work, as well as the manner in which musical accompaniment have been included, are distinctive selling assets. They are equally effective with the efforts of the cast in establishing the story's tense dramatic mood. Generally, the film is serious, sometimes actually grim. Nevertheless it is not without a leavening comedy contrast that entails an appreciable contrast.

Substantially, against a realistic warlike backing which fills the film with sharply breaking and spectacular action, "The Plough and the Stars" tells a human interest love story. It aims to impress upon its auditors that when men, inspired by a patriotic ideal, embark on any great adventure and fight and die, it is their women who make the greatest sacrifices and suffer most. Here Nora Clitheroe is deeply in love with her husband, Jack. As she has dedicated her life to him, so has he dedicated his life to the cause of Irish freedom. A leader, he is continually in danger of capture or death as the desperate weak engage in conflict with the determined strong. As Jack carries on the fight and his companions drop by his side, the picture, in direct and forceful style in both action and dialogue, portrays the manner in which the horrors of carnage chill the hearts and souls of womanhood, but never changes them from the enduring, hopeful creatures they are by nature. In the picture, Jack Clitheroe accomplishes no great miracle. He does not lead the Irish in ridding their homeland of a hated invader. His greatest feat is the manner in which, by a ruse, he outwits the British that he may live to fight another time. His escape is only a temporary relief to Nora, who knows that soon he will be about the dangerous business again.

By no stretch of the imagination is "The Plough and the Stars" an ordinary picture; consequently it requires something more than ordinary showmanship salesmanship effectively to bring it to public attention. From a straight critical standpoint, it is quite likely that it will receive highly favorable notices. Yet it seems that in order that it may receive maximum public interest, it should be presented as a fundamental love story, in which the appeal of romantic heartache and heartbreak is just as strong to women as the quality of its dramatic thrill action is to men.

Outdoor Drama

As Hopalong Cassidy, Johnny Nelson and Windy go adventuring again, thrill action drama, through which is woven a thread of tight suspense, keynotes their activities. It is the quality sustaining the meager romance and well applied comedy contrast. Outdoor production is well mounted, the beauties of natural scenery have been artistically photographed and the motivating story is believable and interesting.

As cattlemen withhold their stock from market anticipating higher prices, shippers plead with them to serve a frantic market. The majority stubbornly refuse, but Hopalong and his pals, sensing the needs of the people in the cities in a humanitarian way, agree to drive a herd to the distributing corrals. Forced to overcome handicaps caused by drought and lack of food and water, the trio also are confronted by the depredations of rustlers headed by Tex, Lanky and Waggoner. As romance involves Nelson and Beth and brings on music, a vein of mystery is inculcated into the story. The chuck wagon is burned. Bunches of cattle are rustled out of the herd and two or three of Cassidy's wranglers are murdered. Determined to defeat his known and unknown enemies, also bring the cattle safely to market, Hopalong, first managing to keep peace between Nelson and Beth, sets out to frustrate Tex's plot. In typical heroic cowboy fashion he does so, first killing Tex and then preventing a stampede. The job accomplished, the trio ride off to further adventures.

Built of the materials that elevated previous Hopalongs to considerable popularity, the film is a modernized outdoor attraction that aptly preserves the full quota of western thrill action. A choice morsel for the Hopalong clientele, it also has its elements for the general rank and file.

Hats Off

(Grand National)

Music, Comedy, Romance

This first musical attraction by Grand National is ambitious enough but the result does not jell into the finished piece of entertainment expected. The story is of a routine mold. The acting is generally better than the weak demands of the plot deserve. The music, with the possible exception of the song "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star," is hardly the hum-able type. The dance ensembles do not reach expectations. The final number of the production, toward which the action of the story has been doggedly building, turns out to be but a bevy of decorative young ladies, dressed in filmy white robes, sailing around in billowy clouds on a revolving merry-go-round and executing bits of familiar dance routine.

Real showmanship angles seem rather scarce. The fact that the plot concerns the rivalry between two expositions patterned after the recent Texas Centennial may have selling possibilities. The personable Mae Clarke, the handsome John Payne and the comedy team of Skeets Gallagher and Helen Lynd, a newcomer in the "dumb" girl-comedian class, may find some appeal. Perhaps, the best showman factor is the dependable Luis Alberni acting another of his familiar but nevertheless grand "maestro" character roles, this time in the character of Rosero, a New York impresario whose genius specializes in producing gargantuan stage spectacles and whose real identity easily will become recognized by the wise ones of Broadway, the veteran actor deserves feature billing for his vastly amusing and touching portrayal of the part.

About the only original note in the plot is that Miss Clarke and Mr. Payne are not rival newspaper reporters but rival press agents, for competing communities sponsoring local expositions. At first disguising herself behind the role of a school teacher and by having the gullible Franklyn Pangborn assume the person of her rather masculine name, Jo Allen, Miss Clarke easily works her way into the good graces of her rival and thus learns all his contemplated press agentry. By this subtle but hardly honorable piece of business, Miss Clarke is able to outsmart the unfortunate Mr. Payne and get the services of the noted Rosero, Mr. Alberni, his wonders to perform. Though smart as Miss Clarke thinks she is she little reckons the trickery of love and when her supposedly calloused heart is nicked by the dart of that sentiment, she gallantly reverses the business deal and engineers the transfer of Mr. Alberni's talent over to Mr. Payne's camp.

Men Are Not Gods

(London Films - United Artists)

Drama

There is a deft blend of box office appeal and sheer artistry in the work of Walter Reisch, who wrote "Escapade," as author and director of this story, which exploits the oldest of all triangular formulae in settings of the theatre, both before and behind the curtain, and of newspaperdom, very much from the inside. A considerable bit of acting from Miriam Hopkins is another asset in a picture which has big sets, a fine sensational climax, and with it all the atmosphere of reality created by a sense of characterization not always attached to fast-moving material. It appears to have something for all publics.

Ann Williams, secretary to Skeates, dramatic critic of a big daily, alters a damning criticism of Edmond Davey, the latest Othello, at the request of the actor's wife and fellow-player, Barbara Halford. She is discovered and fired. Going to see the play for herself, she is enthralled by Davey, who has become a box office draw as a result of the altered Skeates review and has risen to his real acting ability.

Barbara takes Ann home to supper and the girl's admiration for the actor becomes infatuation after this personal contact. They meet again and finally she becomes his mistress. Barbara appeals to her with the oldest of all pleas, that she is about to become a mother. Ann breaks with Davey, telling him that his duty is to Barbara "while she lives." The words obsess him and, in that night's performance of the murder scene in "Othello," he sees red and is in danger of strangling Desdemona in real earnest when a scream from Ann, in the gallery for a last look at her lover, creates a scene of disorder in the midst of which the curtain is rung down. Told of the approaching child, Davey becomes reconciled to his wife. Ann, with a faithful office lover at her side, starts life again.

The translation of the "Othello" tragedy into a real life drama is effective stuff, and the interposed scenes of the play are beautifully spoken, strikingly staged and well acted. Minor incident is rich in humor and humorous character, A. E. Matthews giving a realistic portrait of an eccentric journalist and Rex Harrison of the obituary-writing lover. The main cast includes Gertrude Lawrence as the wife and Sebastian Shaw as the actor, each of them worth mentioning. Camera work by Charles Rosher is as outstanding as the imaginative direction.

At a night trade show, Piccadilly theatre, London, it had a very warm reception, and Miss Hopkins was thought to have excelled herself, particularly in the tragi-comic scenes of her infatuation. Experts look for more big pictures from Reisch.—BRUCE ALLAN, London.

Sabotage

(Gaumont British)

Melodrama

Alfred Hitchcock, one of the most individual directors in the world and already known in America through "The Man Who Knew Too Much," "The Thirty-Nine Steps" and "Secret Agent," offers a typical effort in this Gaumont British production, founded on a Joseph Conrad novel, the original title of which was, as it happens, "The Secret Agent," already used as indicated. It is melodrama given something of the atmosphere of psychological drama, the camera is used with all the skill of silent picture days, and the characterization and acting are very big assets. Definitely an out-of-the rut picture, it can be handled to attract the film connoisseur without losing the masses.

For popular exploitation, the big angle is that a schoolboy is dispatched to carry a parcel containing a timed bomb, which he is to deposit in a railway left-luggage office. He is delayed en route by London's "Lord Mayor's Procession," when a cheap-jack seizes on him for a street demonstration of a toothpaste and, innocent of the contents of the parcel, is blown to pieces with an omnibus-load of people. Hitchcock's gifts of suspense are brilliantly shown in this tragic episode, so grimly relieved by humor.

Many other aspects of the picture can be used in selling campaigns. Undoubtedly, though alterations have been made in the original story, it has much of the Conrad atmosphere to appeal to admirers. The names and performances of Sylvia Sidney and Oscar Homolka are assets, and Desmond Tester, British boy player seen in "Nine Days a Queen," plays well as the young victim. London backgrounds are exceptionally realistic; they include East End as well as West End shots.

The story introduces Mrs. Verloc, wife of a small cinema-owner in the East End, as a woman obsessed by love for her young brother, for whose sake she has married a rather mysterious foreigner. Actually, Verloc is a member of an Anarchist gang controlled by an elderly man known as "the Professor," whose nominal occupation is to run a small bird and pet shop, but whose real task it is to plot terrorist activities in London.

Admirer of the pretty Mrs. Verloc is Ted, assistant at a fruit shop neighboring the cinema, but actually a detective inspector from Scotland Yard. "Ted" is so close in his attentions to Verloc at the little cinema, that the latter is embarassed in carrying out his instructions, from the "Professor," to plant a timed bomb in the luggage office at Piccadilly Circus "Underground" station. He uses the boy as a messenger in the manner and with the results already described. From newspaper accounts, Mrs. Verloc realizes that one of the victims is her brother and that Verloc has sent him to death. The latter's callous attitude enrages her, a knife is handy, and Verloc falls dead.

The police, searching for "The Professor," who has gone to Verloc's cinema in order to efface all traces of his connection with the crime, find the doors locked. They begin to break in but the Professor, cornered, blows the cinema sky-high with another bomb, incidentally destroying Verloc's body and all evidence of his wife's crime. It is inferred that she will find consolation with the young detective.

At a Tivoli (London) press-show it received a good reception; there was considerable praise for Hitchcock's technique, particularly in the use of the cinema performances as dramatic background. Some thought over-subtlety in production had lessened the thrill values.—B. A.

Melodrama

Melodramatic sequences strung against a background of intrigue form a combination in this picture to please those patrons who like their action in quantity. A tale of waterfront activities in the post-repeal era, with the theme revolving around the plight of a reformed rum runner and a feminine probationist getting mixed up with a ruthless gang, the production is fair entertainment.

An exploitation campaign centered about the action qualities would appear to be most appropriate, considering the fact that the cast names, with the possible exception of Margot Grahame, are not of wide recognition. The cast, besides Miss Grahame, includes Gordon Jones, Vinton Haworth, Marc Laurence and Billy Gilbert. The production features are very good, especially direction and photography.

Jones, owner of a small schooner and former rum runner, on receipt of a telegram goes to Torre's Fish Palace to meet the sender. The sender fails to arrive but sends word to Jones to be at Torre's place every night at twelve. Jones, unaware of what is wanted of him, does so, and while there he strikes up an acquaintanceship with Miss Grahame, a waitress, who is out on parole. Later Jones arrives at Torre to find the man he had waited for, murdered. The man had managed to draw a diagram on a piece of cloth and give it to Miss Grahame. When the police arrive Miss Grahame is held for questioning because she is a probationist.

Through the newspapers Jones and Miss Grahame learn that the murdered man was wanted by the police for robbing a gold truck. They decipher the message and find the gold on the bottom of the bay. Jones reveals this to the district attorney. In the meanwhile the gang has taken out the schooner from which the gold was dumped. A police boat overtakes it. Jones and Miss Grahame climax a romance begun early in the picture.

Wanted—A Master

(MGM)

Exceptionally Fine

Prefacing this short feature is the announcement that credit for inspiring the recently announced amateur movie-making contest must be given to the interest aroused through the extraordinary ability demonstrated in this screen subject. A screening of the work easily will convince the skeptical of the unusual worth of this tiny gem of cinema craftsmanship. Reproduced from the 16 mm. film original of two 20-year-old youngsters, Gunther von Fritsch and Arthur Ornitz, this first amateur effort to reach the professional screen displays a novel technique of production that makes for emphatic delight for the patron.

The story is appealingly told, a simple tale of a stray dog who must find himself a master by a certain time or suffer a lethal chamber fate. The poor mongrel's frantic and pathetic efforts to win adoption as the zero hour closes in on him makes dramatic, exciting, humorous and heart-touching entertainment. Pete Smith, doing a "strange interlude" for the dog, voices the canine's harassed thoughts with his comic banter. Running time, 10 mintes.

Interesting

An unpretentious but interesting short subject, this has to do with the sport of skiing, which has found increased favor in this country possibly dating from the winter Olympiad at Lake Placid in '32. Thrill shots are missing, the subject devoting practically its full length to the instruction and demonstration phases. Narration is by Hal Stone. Running time 10 minutes.

Diverting

Another collection of curious tidbits from the wide world of novelty makes up the subject matter of the latest editors from this generally excellent series of short product. Items include the newest device for air-conditioning automobiles, a certain boon for cooling the more fiery tempered of motorists, a dog who has been trained to be a pumper of water, a blind young man who in spite of his heavy handicap is building unassisted a boat of his own, the latest process to convert the energy of the sun's rays into power strong enough to drive a steam engine and a display of stingless bees demonstrating effectively their stinglessness. An entertaining bit of diversion, this number of the group will be a welcome addition to any program. Running time, 9 minutes.

As postmaster and sheriff of the town Clyde has a rival for the blonde's affections in the person of Bob McKenzie, the volunteer fire chief. Both devise ingenious schemes to be alone with the lady. After several false alarms a real fire breaks out and McKenzie rushes out to do his duty. Clyde is kissed by the blonde and is evidently a winner of her affections.

Graveyard of Ships

(RKO Radio)

Very Good

Not the fabled Saragossa Sea but rather the treacherous district around the shores of Cape Hatteras is the locale of this different and interesting short subject. In a series of splendidly photographed shots, the grim might of that "old devil sea" is excitingly reproduced. The stark skeletons of what once were full rigged and able vessels, now hopeless wrecks cast up on the shore like so much driftwood, bear mute testimony to the titanic wrath of the elements. Included in the presentation are some entertaining glimpses into the superhuman skill of the coast guardsmen who pit their puny human powers against the might and fury of the sea. The material, dramatic and excellently produced, should prove fascinating fare for any audience. Running time, 10 minutes.

Legend of the Lei

Appealing

This appealing little Treasure Chest subject will be of particular interest to all those who have visited or still hope to visit the beautiful Hawaiian Islands. In storied form it recounts the meaning behind the Hawaiian flower wreaths with which visitors are bedecked on their departure and which according to custom are to be cast upon the waters to float slowly back to the shore. A beautiful native princess is separated from her true love to marry a neighboring noble lord. In sailing away, she drops upon the water the garland fashioned by her lover for it to return to his care as a perpetual reminder of her until they shall meet again. A cast of island people portray the fable against interesting shots of dance and music. Color carefully applied adds extra distinction and attractiveness. Running time, 10 minutes.

Splendid

Magnificently colored and splendidly edited, this tour of the remote lands of Madagascar and the Seychelles Islands provides an excellent and pleasing bit of screen entertainment. Shown with a skill for pictorial effectiveness, the native life of the people is splendidly screened in a series of exotic settings. Interesting shots of the social, agricultural and industrial life of the lands combined with an equally interesting and informative line of vocal accompaniment, insures certain favorable audience response. Running time, eight minutes.

Weak

Grandma is a little lady with decided ideas of her own and a will just as set. Fed up with imbibing the family drink of distasteful sarsaparilla, she joins the company of the comedy team of Tom Kennedy and Harry Bowen, two sailors on her yacht, and goes to a tough waterfront dive in search of a stronger and more tastier drink. The desired beverage is found and while Grandma is bent on bending a dignified elbow, the two boy friends become involved in a wild free-for-all bout to which the dear old lady adds gusto and effectiveness. There is much rough and tumble action but that is about all. Zeffie Tillbury plays the grand old girl with evident relish but her comic companions, though they work hard, don't seem to be very comic. Running time, 20 minutes.

Fairly Amusing

This short subject finds the Tom Patricola-Buster West combination as two sailors billeted with a family threatened by some big menace in black, who wanders through the story trying very hard to scare everyone including the audience. How the nimble footed team outwit the threatener and also provide on the run some of the eccentric dancing for which they are noted combine to make this a fairly amusing bit of entertainment. U.S. CONTINUES INQUIRY ON ERPI FILM INTERESTS

$2,000,000 Investment in Debenture Stock of Universal Is Told Commission by Drake

Electrical Research Products, Inc., has an investment of $2,000,000 in motion picture production through participation to that extent in the deal by which Standard Capital Company acquired control of Universal last spring, according to testimony presented this week by Whitford Drake, executive vice-president of Erpi, to the Federal Communications Commission. The FCC study of Erpi operations is part of its inquiry into the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Mr. Drake corroborated data dealing with the financial structure of Erpi, a subsidiary of A. T. & T., which was presented by Samuel Becker, special counsel for the commission. The Erpi official said that the particiapation was dictated by the company's interest in "preventing a crash in that situation."

The $2,000,000 investment in debenture stock in the Universal Corporation was listed in the prospectus published in June of this year showing the capital structure of the holding corporation. An additional $2,000,000 was invested by an English group headed by J. Arthur Rank and Lord Portal, another $1,000,000 by the Eastman Kodak Company, and the balance of the $5,500,000 total price paid for Universal was contributed by Standard Capital and several individuals.

Mr. Drake said on the stand that Erpi "expects to get out of it as soon as it can."

It was brought out that Erpi and Eastman received debentures convertible into Universal common stock, and the English group took one-half in debentures and one-half in the common stock. Erpi's arrangement called for conversion into common stock at intervals, at prices ranging from $15 to $25 a share. It was estimated by Mr. Becker that, at an average price of $20, Erpi could receive 100,000 shares of Universal common stock under a voting trust agreement.

Tells of Formation of Group

The details leading to the conclusion of the Universal deal were recited by Mr. Drake and were supplemented by statistics and testimony read into the record by Mr. Becker. A letter from John E. Otterson, former president of Erpi, to Edgar S. Bloom, president of Western Electric at that time, told of the formation of a group headed by J. Cheever Cowdin, president of Standard Capital and now president of Universal, for film financing, and capitalized at $1,000,000. A deal was planned whereby the intended Standard Capital Company would work with Exhibitors Reliance Corporation, wholly owned Erpi subsidiary, in the financing of production.

Mr. Drake declared that Mr. Otterson had approved the plan, and said it was considered valuable in relieving Erpi of the "burden" of film financing. Little was done with Standard Capital, however, Mr. Drake testified, when the Cowdin company became interested in Universal.

A summary of Erpi's film financing, read into the record by Mr. Becker, showed a total to December 31, 1935 of $3,571,918, of which $850,000 was said to be outstanding. Financing of various small independent companies during the period amounted to $1,978,977, Mr. Becker brought out. The counsel read further that up to December 31, 1935, Erpi's earnings from interest amounted to $327,399, and from royalties, $397,351, for a total of $725,250.

It was brought out that the revolving fund established by Erpi for film financing reached a 1933 peak of $800,000, which Mr. Drake said he considered at the time insufficient for higher priced pictures. Attempts were made at the time to interest banks, including the Commercial National Bank and the Manufacturers' Trust Co., in film financing, but they were unwilling to participate, it was said.

The earlier testimony covered in considerable detail the negotiations concerning the Western Service Studios in New York, the latter first housed in the old Edison plant in the Bronx, and later, by lease, in the former Paramount studio in Astoria.

Mr. Becker attempted to prove at one point that Erpi was interested in developing the non-theatrical field, since the theatre equipment business had very nearly reached its saturation point, and had become for the most part a replacement business.

Dealings with E. W. Hammons of Educational and the Christies in the Metropolitan Sound Studios, on the coast which later became the Western Service Studios, were detailed.

Equipment to Revert

Erpi has reached a definite understanding with the major producing companies that the recording equipment used by them will revert to Erpi on expiration of the licensing agreement in 1944, Mr. Drake told reporters at the hearing. The major companies have been paying for the use of the equipment since sound was instituted. Erpi has taken the stand from the beginning that the apparatus was only leased.

Walter S. Gifford, president of A. T. & T., in testimony at the closing session of the hearings this week said that the disposal of Erpi has been considered from time to time by the parent company. Under questioning by Mr. Becker the telephone company president emphasized that the matter has been dropped because the discussions "ran up against a blind alley and stopped." The chief obstacle, he indicated, was the long term producer contracts held by Erpi.

The reason for considering the disposal of the company, he said, was his belief that the Bell System should not be in any other field than communications.

John E. Otterson again took the stand and testified concerning the $50,000,000 loan to William Fox for the purchase of a block of shares in Loew's in which Erpi participated to the extent of $15,000,000, with Halsey-Stuart and several banks joining in supplying the funds.

Court Test Looms on Musicians' Election

Permission has been granted by the American Federation of Musicians to members of Local 802, Musicians' Union in New York, to start a court contest on the results of the election held December 17. Billy Van will act as representative of the defeated candidates.

Court authority will be asked for an inspection of the "manila tickets" given out to members as they arrived. These were intended to show the holders were eligible to cats ballots in the election.

The defeated candidates say that after the stoppage of voting at 8 P.M. there was a period of 40 minutes in which the present officers were unable to find the keys to the ballot boxes and during the period only officers were allowed in the room. It was finally necessary, it is said, to break open the boxes.

Philadelphia Exhibitors Meet MGM Sales Manager

BRITISH INDUSTRY DOUBTS ACTION BY CABINET ON MOYNE QUOTA PLAN

Trade Opinion Unites Against Suggested Control Commission, 50 Per Cent Quota and Quality Tests for All Films

Revival of Reciprocity May Be Considered, with Hope of Legislation Recognizing American Factor in British Success

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Any fears that the Cabinet at once would introduce an amending Cinematograph Films Act on the lines recommended in the acutely controversial "Moyne" Report were removed this week. Answering, in the House of Commons, a question from Mr. Hall Caine, M.P., Dr. Burgin, Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, said that the question was being examined by the Government and steps taken to obtain the views of various sections of the industry and that "some time must necessarily elapse before any decision can be reached."

Adding that "the President of the Board of Trade cannot now say whether legislation on this subject will be introduced during the present session," Dr. Burgin, in the opinion of most film traders, understated the case. The Wardour Street view is that an amendment on the Act on "Moyne" lines is unlikely in any session.

This view arises from various circumstances. The request from the Board of Trade to the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the Kinematograph Renters Society and the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries for their comments on the Moyne Report is in itself significant. All these organizations submitted statements to the Committee and their representatives were personally examined and cross-examined. Presumably their views, embodied in the Minutes of Evidence published by the Committee, are already known to the Government. That the Board of Trade wants to hear from them again is pretty clear evidence that the President, the Rt. Hon. Walter Runciman—and probably the Cabinet, whom he is understood to have consulted—are personally of opinion that the suggestions of the Report are revolutionary and call for further consideration.

A Significant Statement

Still further emphasizing this view was a statement from Sir Samuel Hoare, First Lord of the Admiralty, in his speech at the annual dinner of the London and Home Counties Branch of the CEA. Sir Samuel, who as a Cabinet Minister must be assumed to have direct knowledge of the recommendations of the Moyne Report, said:

"Keep clear as much as you can of Government control. . . . In many parts of the world the hand of the government tends to kill intellectual variety and artistic development. I could give instance after instance."

Even assuming that Sir Samuel was expressing a personal opinion, a statement so definite from a member of the Government is significant in face of the fact that one of the most important, and most generally criticized, of the Moyne suggestions was that a Film Commission should be set up, with salaried members, to administer a Quality Test for British films, to vary the British Film Quota yearly after consideration of the standard of the previous year's output, and to encourage, in some undefined way, the supply of increased finance to British production.

The further proposal that the Quota, during the ten years' duration suggested for a new Act, should rise to fifty per cent, is tied up with the suggestion of a Film Commission, for the reason just indicated. That the Cabinet is "cold" on the Film Commission may reasonably be taken as inferring that it is cold also about the 50 per cent Quota.

Opposition United

This consideration must have been very much in the minds of the joint distributor-exhibitor meeting during the week for the purpose of taking first steps to oppose the adoption of the Moyne Report. Strictly speaking, it was not a conference. The General Purposes Committee of the CEA was in session on the Report and was joined informally by officers of the KRS. All the same, it was a very important occasion, in view of the fact that the two groups, usually to be found in attitudes of mutual hostility, are believed to be united in an attitude of uncompromising hostility to the Moyne Report, and particularly to the Film Commission and the Variable Quota.

A probable outcome of the contact established between these two bodies will be that substantially identical recommendations will be made to the Government by distributors and exhibitors, reflecting fundamental objection on the part of two of the three sections of the trade to the Moyne recommendations.

Freely expressed in trade quarters was the opinion that the whole question of revision of the Films Act was again more or less in the melting pot, and that the Government's final decision was likely to pay more regard to the suggestions which the trade bodies are now putting before it than to the Moyne Report.

Reciprocity Subject Revived

Encouraged by news from America that a policy of quotas might be regarded by the Roosevelt Administration as a factor to be considered in discussing general trade treaties, there was a disposition to canvass the possibility of reviving the policy of reciprocity, championed by Simon Rowson before the Moyne Committee. Many recalled that such a policy was discussed before the introduction of the Films Act and, according to a very general opinion, wrecked by interests concerned chiefly to see the quota principle established.

Further Encouragement

Regarding the Moyne Report as advocating the extension of this principle to the point of absurdity, and remembering that John Maxwell and other major British producers had expressed the view that the industry no longer needed this prop, this section of opinion is not without hopes that the ultimate outcome of the present discussions may be new legislation paying regard to the fact that the commercial stability of British production depends very largely on an adequate release in America.

The holders of this view were further encouraged when they read reports of the remarks of Philip Guedalla, another speaker at the London and Home Counties dinner. Mr. Guedalla is a member of the Advisory Committee under the Films Act, which made a report to the Board of Trade advocating, among other things, a quota on a cost-footage basis.

His criticism of the Moyne Report therefore carried special weight. It was particularly scathing in regard to the Film Commission, in regard to which he remarked, "One does not solve a problem by just creating a Minister for it," and respecting the Quality Test, about which he commented: "I do not want to pay a part-time salary to four wise men and one statutory woman to tell me what I can find out from the pay-box." The only test of a good picture, said Mr. Guedalla, was "a machine that sat in front of a young lady in a glass box."

'LLOYDS' HELD FOR 6th WEEK AT ASTOR AND CARTHAY CIRCLE!

RISING GROSSES AND ADMISSIONS REFLECT PROGRESS MADE IN 1936

Rapid business improvement during the year just past was reflected more than satisfactorily in rapidly mounting grosses and consequently improved financial statements from large companies. A trend toward higher admissions was further indication of optimism. Self regulation within the industry was initiated by the acceptance, in part, of the trade practice program advanced by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America by Universal, United Artists and 20th Century-Fox. Paramount emerged from its long receivership with Barney Balaban as president, Adolph Zukor in charge of production, and Stanton Griffis as chairman of the executive committee. Similar hope for RKO was established with the filing of a reorganization plan which is now before the courts. During the year the industry was shocked by the deaths of Irving Thalberg, Felix F. Feist, Nathan Burkan and Colonel Walter S. Butterfield; chance games and double bills showed no signs of waning; a deal under which Gaumont British was to be divided in ownership between the Schenck brothers and the Ostrers was announced and then left hanging in mid-air when John Maxwell bought into GB in an effort to keep control of the company in England; Nathan Yamins was elected president of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors; Walter Wanger signed a ten year contract with United Artists; George Schaefer became vice-president and general manager of United Artists; control of Universal passed to Standard Capital, headed by J. Cheever Cowdin, and Carl Laemmle retired; Edward L. Alperson organized and heads Grand National; William F. Rodgers was named general sales manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Andrew W. Smith resigned as eastern and Canadian sales manager for Warner Brothers to become United Artists' sales chief; Gradwell L. Sears was named general sales manager for Warner Brothers; W. Ray Johnston's contract as president of Republic was terminated; Merlin H. Aylesworth resigned from National Broadcasting Company; the Moyne committee in London submitted a report recommending a 50 per cent quota for England in ten years; and Al Lichtman and Sam Katz were named Loew vice-presidents. LONDON THEATRE GETS FULL-SIZE TELEVISION

Gaumont British and Baird Demonstrate 'Visual Public Address System' at the Dominion

Possibilities of large screen television suitable for theatre presentation were demonstrated for the first time in London when Gaumont British and the Baird Television Company gave before a press party at the Dominion theatre a preview of what they termed a "Visual Public Address System." Claiming to be the first theatre in the world to install a permanent television screen of usual cinema size, the Dominion will depend on special transmissions for future entertainment and demonstrations.

Staged at the 2,500 seat Dominion in Tottenham Court Road, the show consisted of transmission, from a dressing room in the same building, of a number of head and shoulder shots of performers and speakers. J. J. Baird, inventor of the system, answered from the screen a number of questions addressed to him by telephone from the audience.

It was said that, although the transmission was by wire, equally good results had been obtained experimentally by means of radio transmission, and the only reason this was not employed for the demonstration was the damage caused to the Baird equipment in the recent fire at the Crystal Palace.

The picture presented was upright, eight feet six inches by six feet in size, and was reported notably clear of lining and distortion. From seats in the middle of the theatre the images were compared favorably with reception of televised pictures at the opening of the Alexandra Palace station of the British Broadcasting Company last fall, although those pictures measured less than a foot square.

Simultaneous Audiences

Sponsors of the system say that it will enable politicians and other speakers to address a number of audiences simultaneously. For entertainment purposes, it is conceded that the large picture has obvious limitations at the moment, being applicable only to solo figures. Nevertheless it was pointed out that the demonstration showed the practicability of obtaining clear television images visible to an audience of many hundreds.

Technically, the system demonstrated at the theatre is described as Multi-Mesh television. In the scanning system a secondary field is formed of two or more primary interlaced scans, which is repeated a number of times. The transmitter is a slow speed slotted disc in combination with a high speed mirror drum; The disc revolves at 500 revolutions per minute and the drum at 6,000 revolutions per minute, giving a picture frequency of 16 2/3 per second. At the receiver an arc lamp is the light source and a Kerr Cell forms the light valve.

Television Network Seen

In Washington, at the Federal Communications Commission telephone hearing, Dr. Frank B. Jewett, president of Bell Telephone Laboratories, predicted that commercial television in the United States will develop through an intricate network system. He added that he was "very sceptical about television as a commercial thing."

"If it comes at the present stage of its development it will come only as a national or a quasi-national chain system," Dr. Jewett said. "If my picture is correct this chain system involves a great many more distribution points than radio broadcasting."

Immediate development of television would come from a small, local installation in a metropolitan area, probably New York, he continued. After it had started in this fashion, the telephone executive said, it might continue as a series of regional developments, much as radio broadcasting did. Later these regional organizations would link up. Asked if his company's recently developed coaxial cable would be used for these links Dr. Jewett said that it probably would.

The discussion of the future of television was brought out as Commission Counsel Samuel Becker sought to show that research experiments in the television field would benefit chiefly the long lines department of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and that, in spite of this, the largest portion of research cost was being charged to the associated companies. Dr. Jewett disagreed with this.

New Tube Exhibited

The magentron, a tube which its sponsors expect will place television on a practical footing with radio broadcasting, was exhibited for the first time at the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science this week in Atlantic City. Developed by laboratory workers of Radio Corporation of America, the device is said to cut the television wave length band to one-tenth of its previous width. The instrument thus will increase the potential number of television stations, within the limits set aside for such broadcasting by the Federal Government, from 10 to 100.

Equity Rule Emphasized

In the December of its official magazine, the Actors Equity Association reminded members that it has jurisdiction over the field of television. The publication reprinted a resolution adopted by the Equity Council on Sept. 29, 1931, which provides that "no member of the association shall appear or contract to appear in television, or upon any program broadcast by television, unless all persons participating in any presentation as actors, are members of Actors Equity Association, except by special permission of the Council."

Morton Succeeds Hedges in NBC

Columbia to Honor Montague in Drive

As a tribute to Abe Montague, general sales manager of Columbia Pictures, delegates to the various mid-season regional sales conventions have decided unanimously to call the company's annual sales and liquidation campaign the "Columbia's-Montague Sweepstakes." The sales drive will get under way January 17 and continue for three months until May 1.

In commenting on the drive, Jack Cohn, vice-president, said in New York, "Since Mr. Montague has always avoided the use of his name in special sales efforts of this sort, and because in this particular instance he has consented, at the urging of his own sales staff, it becomes the duty of every man in the organization, including myself, to do everything humanly possible to make this the most successful sales drive and liquidation effort the company has ever known."

It was also decided that a series of bonuses will be given at the end of the sales drive as well as grand awards based on the results of the competitions.

During the three-month period covered by the sweepstakes many of the outstanding features of Columbia's 1936-37 program will be released, including, "When You're In Love," starring Grace Moore; "Lost Horizon," Frank Capra's production starring Ronald Colman; "Women of Glamour," "Weather or No," "Devil's Playground," "I Promise to Pay," "Women in Distress," "Freedom for Sale," "Dodge City Trail," "Westbound Mail," "Law on the Range" and "Find the Witness."

For Annabella

Robert T. Kane has signed Annabella to co-star with Conrad Veidt in the second New World picture, "Under the Red Robe." The French star played her first English-speaking part in Mr. Kane's "Wings of the Morning." Studio reports are that Annabella's work in this film, still to be seen, is expected to put her in the front rank in England and America. Annabella is already big money all over the Continent. London has admired her in French films seen at the Art theatres.

Sophie Stewart, who supported Elisabeth Bergner in "As You Like It" and made an impression even under the shadow of that personality, will have the second woman role in "Under the Red Robe."

Annabella has just played her first scenes. Victor Seastrom, directing, has completed a sequence in the palace of Cardinal Richelieu (Raymond Massey) which has occupied the complete length of one of the huge Denham stages. Five hundred extras, in costumes of 1630, have helped to provide the atmosphere of more than royal splendour in which the great Cardinal moved.

Metro Balcon

At the time this appears in type, Michael Balcon, former director of production to Gaumont-British, starts in as a producer for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's British unit. His contract dates from January 1st, but at this moment Ben Goetz, director-in-chief of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer British Studios, Ltd., has not finally announced the studio to be used for the first of the four pictures to be made in London for world release by Metro: "The Wind and the Rain," "A Yank at Oxford," "Rage in Heaven" and "Silas Marner." The Amalgamated plant will not be ready, and Pinewood is a probability.

Mr. Balcon, associated with an enterprise which is likely to make film history, won't find that role a new one. He has been breaking new ground ever since he first came into production fourteen years ago in Birmingham, where he made advertising films, founded Victory Motion Picture Company, and produced "Woman to Woman" with Clive Brook and Betty Compson.

His next enterprise, in London, was Gainsborough Pictures for which he produced, in the Poole Street studio bought from Paramount, such silent films as "The Constant Nymph," and "The Lodger," and one of the first noteworthy British talkers, "Sunshine Susie." On the way to his more recent achievements for G-B he made a director of photographer Alfred Hitchcock and he since has given first screen parts to Jessie Matthews, Nova Philbeam, Desmond Tester and many others, also starting the film career of Herbert Marshall. All the G-B films seen in America were made under Mr. Balcon's control of the Shepherd's Bush studios.

News Item-Film

A newspaper story gave Erich Pommer the story basis for "Troopship," which he is producing for London Films at Denham. All the London papers gave space to the news that a troopship, approaching Southampton with a regiment completing many years of foreign service, was under orders to sail again immediately with the same troops, for another stretch of foreign service demanded by national emergency. In place of the long stay at home they were looking forward to, the soldiers had just six hours' leave at the port. On this episode of real life, Wolfgang Wilhelm and Patrick Kirwan have based a story showing just what typical individuals of all ranks did with their leave and how they coped with the interruption of plans, declared and secret.

A big cast is being used, headed by Leslie Banks and Flora Robson, as a Colonel of Hussars and his wife, Others are Sebastian Shaw, Patricia Hilliard, Leonora Corbett, Robert Cochran, Rene Ray, Maire O'Neill, Edmund Willard, and Donald Calthrop. Tim Whelan, directing, has James Wong Howe at the camera. Clemence Dane and Ian Hay have written dialogue.

The War Office, by the loan of troops and troopships, and the Admiralty, which loaned and rechristened a warship, have shown their usual desire to help.

Zasu Pitts, Soloist

Zasu Pitts, starring in the George King production of "Wanted," at Sound City, recorded a song, "The Poor Old Cow," in the unusual role of a gangster's "Moll" this week. Expected to be a comedy highspot of the picture, her solo gets its effect largely from the circumstance that Zasu is not really a tough at all, but a virtuous married lady whose husband, equally harmless, has been mistaken for a Chicago immigrant and boisterously welcomed in London's underworld. Claude Dampier is the sap husband. In her first week at the studio Miss Pitts has had plentiful experience of London fog, one of the genuine variety holding her up on the Great West Road on the way to the studio, where a synthetic specimen awaited her on the floor.

"The Gang Show"

Herbert Wilcox, greatest opportunist in the British production field and a showman in the Sam Goldwyn class—he was first in the field with a "Victoria" story, and what he did with "Dawn" is trade history—has started shooting at Pinewood on "The Gang Show," built on a phenomenally successful stage show which Ralph Reader presents annually at the Scala Theatre, with child performers. First studio sequences, of a concert party, have used 200 young players.

"The Gang Show" started as a one-night show with a dozen performers. It caught on so well that last year they shifted it to the 8,000-seat Albert Hall, and still turned thousands away. The singing, dancing and clowning sequences of the original show have been fitted by Wilcox into a story framework providing star parts for the youthful Leonard Snelling, Sid Palmer and Sandy Williamson, and Stuart Robertson and Richard Ainley are added adults. Ralph Reader is writing special musical numbers and supervising the concert sequences. Alfred Goulding, who has just finished "Splinters in the Air" for Wilcox, is directing.

Panto Filmed

Gracie Fields making what is rumoured to be her last film before she announces an American affiliation, has been filming, for ATP's "The Show Goes On," at Ealing, scenes of a typical provincial production of the Christmas pantomime "Dick Whittington." She appears, in fleshings and doublet, as a factory girl who deputizes for the "principal boy" and so starts a stage career. John Stuart is playing opposite.

Also in final shooting at the Ealing studio was the George Formby "Feather Your Nest," with Polly Ward leading woman.

Down in the Forest

Art directors Meerson and Norman, of London Film Productions, have completed the interior forest set for "Knight Without Armour," regarded as Denham's most ambitious piece of staging to date. Three weeks were occupied in transforming an entire floor, which now bears the aspect of a piece of virgin woodland, with a stream 250 feet long winding its way between tall pine and fir trees, interspersed with smaller conifers. The Denham woods were rifled of 550 large trees and 1,200 smaller ones and 500 loads of pine needles were strewn on the 2,000 tons of sand and 1,000 tons of rough turf used for the groundwork.

Twenty property trees, concealing cameras and lights, were planted among the real articles and, illustrating the scope of the action, a special camera track was laid in order to follow the Dietrich-Donat fugitive flight through the wilds, with Red soldiers on their trail.

In the center of the set is the forest pool for Dietrich's "outdoor" bathing act.

The Navy Authentic

Added to the many accurate reproductions of things nautical in Herbert Wilcox's "The Fighting Navy" is now a picture of the Boardroom of the Admiralty in Whitehall, the nerve center of the sea service. The H.W. art department, touring with cameras under the more than benevolent eye of their Lordships of the Admiralty, have now acquired a still record, from the technical equipment of a submarine down to the arm braids of a midshipman, which a few years ago would have led to a Government crisis—if at that time it had been conceivable that the Navy should tolerate, let alone encourage, a cameraman on a British man-o'-war.

The American members of "The Fighting Navy" cast, H. B. Warner, Richard Cromwell and Noah Beery, all finished their parts and sailed home for the holidays.

Also in progress at Pinewood are the Herbert Wilcox "Splinters in the Air" and British National's "Interval for Romance," in which Rawicz and Landauer, pianists and composers of all the music, have made such a hit that, a week after appearing on the floor, they already have been signed for a second picture.

Jessie Matthews

The return of Jessie Matthews to the G-B studios at Shepherd's Bush, and to her part in "Head Over Heels," directed by her husband, Sonnie Hale, was made an event by the studio executives and staff. From the presentation of bouquets on arrival the star went to a dressing room also filled with blooms, signalizing her recovery from an illness which has lasted exactly three months.

That the star of "It's Love Again" is herself again seems to be shown by the fact that she was at work at the studios from 7 a.m. until 4 p.m. and that Glenn Mac Williams, cameraman on the picture, declares her to be a perfect match in weight and appearance with the Jessie who made the earlier sequences in the summer. A week's work will finish it.

Good King Charles

Scenes shot for Twickenham's "The Vicar of Bray" revive the memory of days when the playhouse began to play a part in British royal history—and scandal. Hamilton Price, as the young Prince who later became Charles I, is pictured with Stanley Holloway, his tutor and future Vicar, in a frolic at the Globe Theatre and more particularly in the dressing room of the actress Meg Clancy, played by Eve Gray. At the Hammersmith studio they also shot interiors of the famous Vicarage.

More elaborate sets, at the Twickenham studio, will reproduce the interior of Castle Brendon, in Ireland, and the village square and green at Bray.

"She Got What She Wanted," with Rod La Rocque, Constance Collier and Tucker McQuire, is practically completed at the J. H. studios, Elstree.

BIP up to Schedule

"Bulldog Drummond at Bay," directed by Roy William Neil, is in progress at BIP, Elstree, with John Lodge in the title-role, Claude Allister playing his famous "Algy" part and Dorothy Mackaill appearing as one of those sophisticated American beauties.

The pre-Christmas activity implied by Director of Productions Mycroft's big schedule will advance a number of pictures to completion in the near future but another batch will occupy the vacant floor space almost immediately.

Diana Churchill is to play the lead in "Hunt the Pearls," opposite a Hollywood male star still to be selected. Graham Cutts will direct.

Will Fyffe, famous Scottish comedian, is playing opposite Maire O'Neill, Irish character actress, in "Spring Handicap."

Buddy Rogers is to be starred in a musical, so far untitled, in which one of the attractions will be Carol Levis and his BBC Amateurs.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 51

Bluebook School Question No. 51 was: What do you regard as the best course of procedure if a film catches fire at the projector aperature?

I believe it best not to identify answers, and in order to conserve space, to omit names this week. Here is one:

"Before considering what to do when a fire occurs, let us consider what should be done before one occurs. First, are the magazine valves in perfect condition? Second, are the sprocket teeth in good condition, therefore unlikely to cause torn film? Is the aperture tension unnecessarily heavy, thus making for liability of torn film? Third, is the film itself in good condition, or have we accepted junk which has loose spices, ripped sprocket holes and other trouble makers? That we should be compelled to do film inspection work without pay does get my angora, but just the same, my life and the lives of men, women and children in the theatre is of greater importance than the doing of free work for an exchange.

"If an aperture fire does occur, the dowser must come down instantly, together with the port shutters. The motor switch must be yanked open and the projector stopped pronto. Magazine doors to remain closed. In the event the fire gets into a magazine, there is nothing to do except to play a stream of fire extinguisher chemical or water on it. Oh, yes, I have of course assumed the exhaust fan, if any, to be working at full capacity."

My compliments to this man for considering how to avoid film fires. He is one who believes in locking the stable door before the nag is purloined. Here is another answer:

"In case of an aperature fire, several things may occur that would call for different methods of procedure. For example, the blaze may be so slight that it will be automatically extinguished. It happens that way sometimes, in which case it is necessary only to clean the parts that have been soiled by the fire, using peroxide of hydrogen for the purpose, make the necessary splice, rethread and proceed, having of course first determined what cause the trouble.

"But in the event the fire gets into either magazine, nothing can be done insofar as concerns the fire itself. The magazine doors must not be opened. It is of course understood that first of all the projectionist will have, the instant fire is discovered, seen to it that the port fire shutters and dowser are down, the motor switch opened and the projector stopped just as quickly as possible. When a fire at the aperture occurs it is coolness and speed of action that counts. It is well, as soon as the things named have been attended to, to try to squirt fire extinguisher chemical into the projector mechanism casing and magazine fire valves, so far as may be accomplished without disturbing the magazine doors. Whether or not the mechanism casing should be opened will depend upon whether or not film has piled up therein. If there be little or none, I would grab a fire extinguisher, open the mechanism casing door and squirt chemical into the casing and magazine valves.

"After all, Brother Richardson, effective action depends upon the projectionist being beside the projector, with a fire extinguisher ready at hand and with ability to act with speed and good judgment."

Here is still another, and while I cannot agree with it in all points, it nevertheless is excellent:

"The first, one most important thing is safety to the audience. Next comes safety to property. Panic may cost the lives of several or even of many people and just one life is more important than would be the destruction of the finest, best equipped projection room in the country. If the room itself is properly constructed, equipped and ventilated, a full 2,000-foot reel of film may burn in a closed projector magazine without serious damage to anything more than a small portion of the equipment. But the burning of a few feet of film may cause destruction of life if some excitable person sees smoke and shouts 'Fire' at the top of his voice, or if some woman lets out a scream.

"Here is the general course of procedure, as I see it: First, port fire shutters down. Second, dowser down. Third, motor cut off and projector stopped as quickly as possible. Fourth, light the auditorium. If there are dimmers, turn them up fairly slowly so as not to startle the audience. Fifth, see to it that the emergency exhaust fan is on to full capacity. Sixth, bring fader to zero. Sound has been stopped with the projector, but this will prevent accidental sound incident to fighting the fire being carried through the system.

"Do all this before even looking at the fire for the reason that any one thing overlooked may permit the audience to become alarmed, no matter how quickly the fire might be extinguished. Moreover, once your attention is turned to the fire itself it is highly improbable anything else will get attention. Seventh, if the fire still is burning but has not reached either magazine, use a fire extnguisher (never use a soda-acid type of extinguisher—its use around electrical equipment is both dangerous and destructive). Open both mechanism and soundhead doors if necessary, but under no condition open either magazine door, as that would admit air and create a great mass of flame instead of, as with door tightly closed, masses of black smoke. Eighth, if the fire gets into either magazine, make no attempt to extinguish it but leave as quickly and quietly as posible, notifying the manager so he may dismiss the audience."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 55

(A) Explain the cause of aberration in a spherical mirror when working with a projector light source.

(B) Just what is the effect of spherical aberration on the light beam as a whole?

(C) What constitutes a parabolic or elliptical mirror?

(D) What effect has spherical aberration upon the image formed?

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

Still another says: "Port fire shutters down. Dowser down. Motor switch opened. Projector stopped as quick as possible. Fader to zero. House lights on. Vent shaft wide open and exhaust fan going full power. Leave magazine doors closed tightly, and if fire has got into one or both, get out and notify manager. If it has not got into either magazine, then make such attempt as you may to extinguish the blaze, though what is best procedure in one case might be punk in another. Keep a cool head, use speed (plenty of it) and judgment."

Still another makes a suggestion that seems to me to have value. This man suggests the making of a spring controlled fire extinguisher having a suitable nozzle and a plunger that might be depressed and held with a suitable trigger; then, with the "barrel" filled with chemical, hung nozzle upward in suitable position, the projectionist could grab the gun, yank the mechanism casing (not the magazine) door open and, merely by depressing the trigger release, train a small but powerful stream of chemical upon the blaze.

Seems to me this might have real value. I commend it to the attention of equipment manufacturers. With a fairly powerful spring, a one-quart gun would, it seems to me, project a very strong stream about a sixteenth of an inch in diameter for at least half a minute—ample time to accomplish the purpose unless the blaze had already entered a magazine, in which case I fully agree that nothing can be done except to get out quickly and quietly.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—One of the greatest box office disappointments we played to weekend audiences in some time. It's purely class picture which did 50 per cent decrease on our weekend receipts.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

First National

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—A very good picture that did no business, due to the fact of Kino parties and amateur play. These are things that can't be helped before Christmas. It's a real fine picture for small towns.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

CASE OF THE BLACK CAT, THE: Ricardo Cortez, June Travis—As good if not better than the average run of the "Case of" series. It has lost its drawing power and we hope they will realize that the people are tired of them. Played December 9-10. Running time, 62 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—Another late booking, but a picture that drew fairly well just the same. It's a musical treat, and in my estimation there's no one over here any smarter than this Matthews girl. She has everything and does it. Played November 23-25. Running time, 85 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

THIRTY-NINE STEPS, THE: Robert Donat—This picture and other G-B productions convince me that Gaumont British pictures are equal to the best produced in Hollywood. Never will I forget Robert Donat's performance in "The Count of Monte Cristo," and his efforts in this picture in no way hurt his prestige. Played November 16-18. Running time, 90 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix—Played this one rather late while we were still snowbound. To see it you had to snowshoe your way in or harness up the old mare to the cutter, but those who did brave the elements thought it well worthwhile. Played December 10-12. Running time, 85 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

APRIL ROMANCE: Richard Tauber—Played to 18 admissions first night, no second show as those that came in middle of picture got enough by the time the end came. Second night played to 14 customers, four of whom walked out about third reel; no second show customers at all, giving operator added rest period. Played December 14-15.—Grady Cook, Joy Theatre, Pontotoc, Miss. Small town patronage.

GORGEOUS HUSSY, THE: Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor, Lionel Barrymore—A wonderful production, good enough for any town. All members of cast do great work, but, of course, Lionel Barrymore overshadows the rest with another of his great characterizations.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

HIS BROTHER'S WIFE: Robert Taylor, Barbara Stanwyck—This would have been a good picture if they would have let those South Sea Island bugs go to thunder and put in its place some comedy. Our patrons don't care for this type of picture. Running time, 82 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LIBELED LADY: William Powell, Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy, Myrna Loy—May break box office records in the city, but was not even close in the country. Good comedy drama that did not please the audience. Had to run a Gene Autry second day (Saturday) to even interest the patrons. Running time, 98 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Wilbur V. Cole, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town patronage.

LONGEST NIGHT, THE: Robert Young, Florence Rice—Shame on Leo wasting good film on this one. Will the continuous flow of murder pictures ever end? This also applies to gangster and newspaper reporter stories. And I see many more are on the way from Leo. Running time, 57 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

OLD HUTCH: Wallace Beery—A swell picture, right down the alley of small towns. This is the type people like to see, human interest stories with no special artificial scenery. Played December 11-12. Running time, 80 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

OLD HUTCH: Wallace Beery, Eric Linden, Cecilia Parker—It is a homely picture of a ne'er-do-well. Rather a thin story and the love scenes gave the effect that they had to have some romance, and were rather amateurish on the part of Eric Linden.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PICCADILLY JIM: Robert Montgomery—Only a fair program picture. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Cary Grant—Much better than average film fare. Some of our women do not care for Harlow but we thought she was swell in this picture. The story was extra good and we drew better than average the second night. Played December 6-7. Running time, 95 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Cary Grant—A smart picture and smart entertainment and quite the best picture Harlow has made. Drew less than average crowds because this little town was snowbound at the time, couldn't even shovel your way in. Played December 3-5. Running time, 95 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone—Good program picture that did poor at the box office. Running time, 93 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TARZAN ESCAPES: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—Seemed to go over fairly well. Many said not good as previous Tarzan pictures. Got razzed for booking on Sunday, but as it did above average, we should worry. Running time, 90 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore—Of course, they liked it, and so will you. Besides being a little different it stands above the normal class of program pictures. Played November 5-7. Running time, 72 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

Paramount

KLONDIKE ANNIE: Mae West, Victor McLaglen—Just fair. Not much ado of anything. Mae's voice very poor. Too low recorded and can be hardly heard. Others talk much better. Running time, nine reels. Played December 2.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

LADY, BE CAREFUL: Lew Ayres—Very good comedy. It looks as if Paramount is going to deliver the goods this year. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby—Very good; this is the type of picture that always goes over well. The directing and acting was very good. Running time, 88 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby—The music was good, yes, and Bing sings just as well as ever, which brings it a little above the average picture. We did only fair on it. Played November 9-11. Running time, 75 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

THREE MARRIED MEN: Lynn Overman—Good program comedy that pleased our Saturday crowd. Running time, 61 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

THREE ON THE TRAIL: Bill Boyd, Jimmie Ellison—They like these Hopalong Cassidy series here. They are action westerns of the first type, and Bill Boyd as Cassidy appeals to everyone. Played November 26-28. Running time, 58 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BIG GAME, THE: June Travis, Philip Huston—Pretty good program football picture. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MARY OF SCOTLAND: Katharine Hepburn, Fredric March—A wonderful picture but it is too long for the ordinary picture fan. Also it is not good for small towns or country, but great for city patrons and class theatres. Played December 12.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SWING TIME: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—More comedy in this than in any other of the Astaire-Rogers pictures. Not quite as good as "Follow the Fleet," yet it was most entertaining, and drew very well at the box office. Played November 28.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SWING TIME: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Astaire and Rogers still great drawing card, but this one not up to the standard of previous ones on account of supporting cast not being on a par with their other pictures. Looks like the producers were trying to save money by making Astaire and Rogers carry their own load. They are undoubtedly the world's greatest dancing team and Astaire does plenty of marvelous dancing, but they need support, the kind they got in "Roberta." Irene Dunne co-starred makes the picture perfect and exhibitors could afford to pay plenty of rental but they can't expect a couple of dancers to make a top notch picture. I hope they put someone in the next one that can really sing. Played December 9-10.—Fred J. Case, Pompano Theatre, Pompano, Fla. General patronage.

WANTED: JANE TURNER: Gloria Stuart, Lee Tracy—Fair enough programmer but when will this cycle of gangster, murder and newspaper reporter pictures end? By the time we play such from all producers we have to cram about 48 a year down the patrons' throats and they are kicking about them. Running time, seven reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea—A truly remarkable picture. Held interest every minute. Walter Brennan does a great job as the old river pappy. Be sure and play this picture; you won't be sorry.—L. G. Tewskbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea—Good show and pleased all that came. Star names not strong to bring them in. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 14-15.—Wilbur V. Cole, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town patronage.

BORDER PATROLMAN, THE: George O'Brien—Good program pictures. We can always depend on seeing plenty of action when George comes to our theatre. Good for Friday and Saturday. Running time, six reels. Played December 4-5.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

BORDER PATROLMAN, THE: George O'Brien—Thought this very good for its type. The story held the interest although everyone knew how it was going to turn out. Not too much impossible action. Played December 4-5. Running time, 59 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CAN THIS BE DIXIE: Jane Withers, Slim Summerville—Reading not-so-good criticisms on this, booked it with feeling of doubt for two days. Did above average business, customers pleased; second day better than first. Played December 9-10.—Grady Cook, Joy Theatre, Pontotoc, Miss. Small town patronage.

CAREER WOMAN: Claire Trevor, Michael Whalen—Press dispatches advise us that Edith Maxwell has been sentenced for the second time on a charge of second degree murder in connection with the killing of her father. Thus, in spite of all the protest from every section of the country, a second trial granted this girl has resulted in a jury finding her guilty. I am wondering if the possibility of a less severe sentence might have been in order if "Career Woman" had been permitted to be screened in the courtroom. Anyone seeing it would surely get a different perspective of the Maxwell case, and I believe it would have saved the girl. After all, Pete Smith's "Killer Dog" subject saved a condemned dog in Brockport, N. Y. Couldn't this picture save a human from the grim justice of mountain folk? "Career Woman" is excellent program picture entertainment. It should be shown where it will do the most good. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 17.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE RACE TRACK: Warner Oland—Chan always solves his mystery and finds the guilty men no matter where it is and how slick the crooks may be. Very good show for any night. O. K. Oland. Running time, seven reels. Played December 9.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—While Shirley still draws above average business, we are beginning to hear some rumbles from the adult audience that these child prodigy pictures are all cut over the same pattern, and certainly there is nothing original about this. It is the same old gag. Feed all the lines to the prodigy and have her do her couple of songs and a dance or two. Shirley is cute and a good little actress, but is the same thing over again in all her pictures. "The Captain's Kid" was about the same only of a different story with Sybil Jason, another cute child and that did not do business at all. I may be in the minority, but I think that they have run their course and are on the way out.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Dorothy Wilson—The screen lost one of the most lovable of persons when Will Rogers passed on. Although this picture is old, still his inimitable style and his unsurpassable humor dominated the screen. As for the picture itself it was an excellent program picture suitable for everyone. Dorothy Wilson was splendid in every way. Bill Robinson as the dancing servant delivered his usual excellent tap dancing. Charles Sellon as Pappy gave a comical performance and the others of the cast all helped to make this last picture of Will's perfect entertainment. It was well liked here and the men were in an uproar from start to finish. Would like to see a general revival of all Will Roger's pictures. Played December 19. Running time, 85 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, State Prison, Trenton, New Jersey. Prison patronage.

KING OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED: Robert Kent—The poorest Zane Grey we have played to date. Not even a good western. Running time, 58 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Withers—One of her best to date. Plenty comedy and action. Kept our people interested from beginning to end. Played December 19.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

PEPPER: Jane Withers—Played it old and most had seen it. Pleased all that wandered in. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 16-17.—Wilbur V. Cole, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town patronage.

SING, BABY, SING: Alice Faye, Adolphe Menjou, Ted Healy, Ritz Brothers—This is a weak sister and the weakest story that I have ever seen in any picture. The director made a mess of what little he had to do with. They dragged everything but an alley cat in to try for the laughs. And if Menjou is funny in a night shirt (he looked like Mahatma Ghandi) then our audience lacks a sense of humor. The Ritz Bros., except that they can dance, Phooey.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHITE FANG: Michael Whalen, Jean Muir—This one seemed to greatly please our people. It was different from "Call of the Wild" and was full of action both indoors and out in the wilds. Good for small towns and country. Played December 5.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

WHITE FANG: Michael Whalen, Jean Muir—Pretty good but not ever as good as "Country Beyond." Running time, 74 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHITE HUNTER: Warner Baxter—Good enough but might have been better.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

United Artists

AMATEUR GENTLEMAN, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Elissa Landi—Very, very long and a thoroughly boring production. A good story poorly acted and produced. Running time, 100 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

ONE RAINY AFTERNOON: Francis Lederer, Ida Lupino—Quite the funniest picture we've run for ages. Not star great by any means. Funeral-like Donald Meek as a judge is a scream. Together with Hugh Herbert and the various hilarious complications it all becomes one huge laugh. Played December 14-16. Running time, 79 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

THESE THREE: Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon, Joel McCrea—A brilliant picture any way you look at it. Perfectly cast and perfectly acted. Taken from "The Children's Hour," it drew because of that fact. Interesting and entertaining the whole way through. Played December 7-9. Running time, 95 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

THUNDER IN THE EAST: Merle Oberon, John Loder—Not even a good programmer. If we hadn't double-billed it we would have perished. Its one reel of action is the last and took nine reels to lead up to it. Played November 26-28. Running time, 90 minutes.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ont. Small town patronage.

Universal

MAGNIFICENT BRUTE, THE: Victor McLaglen, Binnie Barnes—This, the latest from the New Universal, is the grandest flop of the season. It has so many weak spots in it that I would hate to start in to tell you how many. I made the mistake in giving this added playing time because McLaglen rated so big, but I should have given it less playing time than usual or none at all.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne—A great show, but not as good as the first version we ran some years ago. Very much different and then it should not conflict with the business as it is made by a different cast and made good. Running time, 12 reels. Played December 6.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE, THE: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—Another epic that went flat at the box office with two important stars, Flynn and De Havilland, doing good work. It is my judgment that the picture is too brutal, and while it is a chapter of history, it is far gone by and most have forgotten it. The last charge is terrific and horses went down right and left. In fact, to a lover of animals, it was awful. I had heard before I ran the picture that some of the parent-teachers had condemned this part of it and I think they had cause. It is realism carried too far. Drew no more than any ordinary picture in this spot. And I don't know the answer if the above is not it. It is apparent that they spent oodles of money on the picture and I am of an open mind, if it was worth it after the little support that the picture received here. Not a children's picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ISLE OF FURY: Humphrey Bogart, Margaret Lindsay—Just program. Another short feature, or shall we say long short, put out for the express purpose to furnish exhibitors with material for double feature bills at the expense of those who will not enter such an arrangement. This menace is far worse than the giveaway programs. Played December 16-17. Running time, 60 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, A: James Cagney, Joe E. Brown, Hugh Herbert, Frank McHugh, Victor Jory, Olivia De Havilland—Truly a gigantic, stupendous, colossal, tremendous flop! Despite the casting of practically all of Warner's 1935 talent list, despite adequate promotional efforts by this theatre, despite good weather and supposedly improving business conditions, this picture grossed barely more than film rental. When will producers, so imbued with their personal desires to create artistic triumphs and thus become the envy of their fellow-producers, learn that the general movie-going public wants merely to be entertained—to laugh, to cry, to figuratively hiss the villain and cheer the hero—boys meets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl—in other words, to think with its heart instead of its head. Almost a simple formula—practically every box-office success has these ingredients—yet every producer tries to elevate the public's mind with overlong, incomprehensible and supposedly artistic pictures (I almost said motion pictures; that wouldn't be quite true). Why alienate 90 per cent of the people from the movie-going habit to gain the sporadic patronage of the 10 per cent. Played December 15-17.—Harold Bernstein, Plaza Theatre, Norwood, Ohio. General patronage.

STAGE STRUCK: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Warren William—A very weak percentage picture. We used to expect specials from this company when a percentage picture was booked. Now we seldom expect any increase in attendance and thereby are not disappointed when there is none. Played December 13-14. Running time, 91 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Nebr. Small town patronage.

BEWARE OF BLONDES: Young Romance—Just a so-so two-reel musical.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Musical Comedies—Good comedy. Enough said. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SPRING IS HERE: Niela Goodelle—And the audience wished that spring had never come. It is about as no good as anything that we have run for some time. No audience appeal whatever and dumb from the word go.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

EVERY SUNDAY: Tabloid Musicals—A good band act with singing.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HURLING: Pete Smith Specialty—A dandy sport short on the Irish game of hurling, in Pete Smith's inimitable manner.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LA FIESTA DE SANTA BARBARA: Musical Comedies—Very good. Running time, two reels.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TWO LITTLE PUPS: Harman-Ising—Excellent. The best color reel we have played for some time. Metro's color shorts are very good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Paramount

as good as many of his previous ones.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MOVIE MELODIES ON PARADE: Headliner Series—Too old recording. Very poor. Lots of poor music. Does not mean anything. Running time, one reel. —Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

RAH, RAH, FOOTBALL: Will Osborne and Collegiates—Good. Running time, nine minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TALKING THROUGH MY HEART: Screen Songs —A screen song that makes a good filler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

MARCH OF TIME: No. 3—Just a fair filler. Not any extra business and therefore too high-priced for us. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 4—Good news behind the news does not come up to expectations. No extra comments. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PATHE TOPICS, NO. 2: A very fine reel and on a par with Paramount Pictorials.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

MOVIETONE NEWS: Fox have prepared the most interesting news on the abdication of our past King, showing the highlights of his life, that bears playing it in any situation. Fox seems to have the edge on other news.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

ELMER THE GREAT DANE: Oswald Cartoons—Good cartoon to fill in the program. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

GOING PLACES, NO. 27: Heart of the Sierras—Nice reel. They like these travelogues and are a relief from some of the so-called comedies.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BENEATH THE SEA: Pepper Pot—A real interesting short subject.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

JOLLY COBURN AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A very novel band act worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

OFFICERS' MESS, THE: Shemp Howard—Warner's comedies haven't got the laughs others have. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RYTHMITIS: Hal LeRoy, Toby Wing—A great little musical feature. Hal LeRoy dances superbly and Toby Wing poses effectively. Good music, good dancing and a hackneyed plot which does not detract from the swift moving feature. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

VAUDEVILLE TOPNOTCHES: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—Very good, as Warner's mostly are.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

VAUDE-VILLAINS: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—A dandy vaudeville reel. This is a riot full of comedy and clever people and should have preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

VINCENT LOPEZ AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—One of the best orchestra films. Nimble fingered Lopez does some excellent work on the ivories. Fred Lowry gives an unusual touch with his whistling. Johnny Morrison sings "A Tavern in the Town," and a pair of ball room dancers round out ten minutes of fine entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Conciliation boards for regulation of trade practices, as proposed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, are sharply attacked in the latest issue of the bulletin of Independent Exhibitors, Inc., in Boston, the New England Allied unit.

We are watching the possibilities and are prepared to fight locally and nationally any such setup."

CHICAGO THEATREDOM SEES MANY CHANGES

B & K Adoption of Doubles, End of Clearance Fight, Improved Business Are Noted

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

Theatre business in Chicago has undergone several important changes in the past year. Foremost among these was the inauguration of double-featuring by the Balaban & Katz circuit and subsequent adoption of the same policy by other circuits and independent theatres.

B & K executives say they took to doubles after three years of single featuring in order to enhance the already growing boxoffice receipts. Others are of the opinion that the reason was that the circuit wanted to play most of the product it had bought.

Another highlight was the clearance battle between B & K and the independents. This was called off before the two parties could get into a tangle in the courts, and B & K was the one to drop the fight. This victory for the independent theatre owners showed the strength they have acquired.

Still another important development was the acquisition of the State-Lake theatre and the possibility of the McVickers also being annexed by B & K. This will give the major circuit definite control of the Loop area with only the RKO-Palace theatre playing in opposition. The State-Lake will be taken over by B & K the first of May. Decision on the McVickers will be made soon.

Amicable settlement of the exhibitor operators' wage contract after long arguments was another milepost just passed.

Adoption of the 2,000-foot reel was the subject of a bitter dispute. City ordinances and rulings by the city electrical inspectors had the exchanges up in the air for weeks but just lately the situation has cleared some and it is possible that an understanding will be reached before long. It is reported that numerous theatres are operating in violation of the city rules which are different from those of any other city in the country. Distributors and city officials are expected to get together soon and settle the differences.

The last few days of the year marked the passing, for the time being at least, of giveaway games such as Bank Night, Screeno, Rolleo. A drive against these games was started by the Better Business Bureau and after a stream of constant questioning comments to the mayor, police and state officials asking for action the situation came to a showdown and resulted in a number of arrests and the abandonment (temporarily at least) of the games by both circuit and independent theatres.

Warner Bros. theatres, which had used auto, radio and other giveaways now are starting double features as a test. According to citywide reports the double feature idea is not at all popular with local patrons.

Grosses of both circuit and independent theatres were the highest in six or seven years. Theatres that had been dark for years were reopened, and new houses were built. Reports are that the Balaban & Katz Corporation, which had a profit of nearly $700,000 last year, will show $2,000,000 profit for 1936.

All Chicago theatres, especially the circuit houses, were ready for the biggest New Year Eve business in years.

The Palace theatre was to give two shows with all seats reserved, the Rialto a midnight show with seats selling at $2.20. Many of the deluxe neighborhood theatres charged $1.00 for all seats, none reserved.

Many theatres set in special vaudeville shows, and talent for stage presentations was at a premium.

Unlike most years, theatre men this year signed pantomime acts and shows without big names, pointing out that happy-go-lucky audience is no place for a headliner.

Mexican Industry Lauds Censorship

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

The industry in Mexico, whatever it thinks of political censorship, sees in the new national picture censorship, now a fact for the first time, at least a removal of much of the overlapping by state and municipal boards.

Regulations governing the federal board, officially announced by the ministry of the interior, demand that its personnel be three directors—a chairman, a vice-chairman and a secretary, one special official, a chief and subchief of department, and 10 special investigators.

The board has orders to completely ban from exhibition anywhere in Mexico any pictures, foreign or Mexican, that:

Wilfully insult or maliciously ridicule Mexico, her government, people and their manners and customs or those of nations friendly to Mexico; attack the "just aspirations and rights of the workers" or the right to strike; humiliate the worker or put him in a humiliating or shameful light; discriminate in any way against Spanish American peoples or color; outrightly eulogize gross exploiters of labor or offer apologies for them or do that for anti-democratic administrations, directly or indirectly make war propaganda or propaganda for the oppressors of the poor and against the "just desire of the workers to protect their interests"; glorify gangsterism, social vices and crime; laud or extoll the might is right principle; give workers an inferiority complex; give the lower middle class a defeatist spirit, or attack the principle of family life.

It is explained that banning applies in these cases only when the objectionable matter is spread throughout the entire picture, but that if it is possible to remedy the situation by cutting a scene or two without disrupting continuity, the rest of the film will be approved.

Assurance that he intends to do all possible to aid the Mexican movie industry was expressed in the first personal letter President Lazaro Cardenas has written in praise of a picture. The missive was sent to Bustamante y de Fuentes, newest Mexican producers, for their "Alla en el Rancho Grande," the new English title of which is "Way Down on the Rancho Grande."

This film promises to establish the highest gross any picture has scored in Mexico. After a month's run in the Federal District, which includes Mexico City, the gross was close to 200,000 pesos (about $56,000), a revenue that has never been equalled by any picture in Mexico. The picture has two months more to run in the District before starting a long road tour of Mexico.

Mexican cinema audiences take hard a sudden disappointment. This was again demonstrated by the riot in which three persons were slightly hurt, 300 chairs and some other furniture were destroyed and considerable other property damage was done, at the Cine Teresa, a large and popular local neighborhood house. The trouble started when the management had to switch, at the request of the government inspector, a European spy story for a light comedy. The audience clamored for the advertised spy film, and began the riot when the announcement of the officially commanded change was flashed on the screen. It took police and firemen several minutes to restore peace.

Mexican producers operating within the Federal District, which includes Mexico City, will be exempt from all municipal taxes, starting in 1937, by the terms of a new Congressional decree. The majority of producers in the country have their studios within the boundaries of the Federal district.

Scanlon Awarded Medal

Patrick F. Scanlon, Brooklyn editor and director of the Legion of Decency, has been designated by St. Bonaventure College to receive the "Catholic Action Medal" awarded annually to a Catholic layman. Rev. Thomas Plassmann, president of the college, made the award to Mr. Scanlon, who is managing editor of the Brooklyn Tablet, official organ of the diocese of Brooklyn.

Guaranteed Acquires Product

Guaranteed Pictures has acquired the serial, "Shadows of Chinatown;" "Sport Melodramas," featuring Hermin Brix in seven pictures; eight "Historical Dramas" featuring Tom Keene, four Fanchon Royer productions and the Tom Tyler western group for world distribution outside of America.

Named Feyder Representative

Winifred Van Beveren has been appointed personal representative in New York for Jacques Feyder, who produced several pictures in Hollywood some time ago. His more recent production is "La Kermesse Heroique," which is now playing in New York.

Paramount Takes Up Options

Paramount has exercised options on three assistant directors and three stock company players. The directors are Hal Walker, Joe Lefert and Joe Youngerman. Lee Brown, Priscilla Moran and Irene Dale are the players.

Principal Signs Neuman

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures, has signed Kurt Neuman, director, to a new contract calling for three pictures, the first of which will be "Boy Blue," starring Bobby Breen.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

SCENARIO

Chairman penning piece for forthcoming annual issue of "Fame." Opines that Hollywood does everything but get the money—the manager does that. Genuflects duly in direction of the studios for titanic labors involved in turning out acceptable product, then writes: "But Hollywood has nothing at all to do with the most important operation, selling the picture directly to the public."

Sits back and examines last sentence. Debates positiveness of flat statement. Decides he may be covering too much territory. Rewrites sentence to read: "But Hollywood has little to do with the very vital operation of selling the picture to the public."

Finishes article. Turns it in. Comes the dawn. Comes Sunday. Comes the New York Times. Chairman opens to drama section. Stops at "Film Gossip" column by B. R. Crisler. Reads of interview with Paramount's Gail Patrick just returned from tour down south visiting exhibitors in interests of the Adolph Zukor Silver Jubilee drive.

Chairman studies column, raises eyebrows, picks up pen, sets down quotes from interview as follows:

"Miss Patrick says her tour of the country has taught her how unimportant the players are in picture business. They're just people who are packed in cans like sliced pineapples or baked beans, she says, and shipped to more or less defenseless theatres around the country. . . . The poor exhibitors who take a chance and order a large consignment of this strange merchandise, sight unseen, are the people who keep the wheels going 'round."

EXPLOITATION DOES IT

Anyone who reads the financial page can tell you without stammering that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has for a long, long time operated definitely in the black, even during the worst years of the depression. But your smart showman will point out without discounting the strength of M-G-M stars, production and distribution, that the above happy state of finances is due in no small part to the powerful exploitation behind the product applied year in and year out and the stressing of exploitation in the company's advertising by Howard Dietz, Si Seadler and Billy Ferguson.

Further proof that M-G-M knows there is plenty of gold in exploitation is presented in the current expansion of the company's field forces under Ferguson's direct and able guidance wherein every territory now has the full services of a highly-skilled exploiteer.

There never was a time in the history of this industry when large-scale exploitation skillfully applied by talented hands ever failed to bring gratifying results. That there are fat dividends to be had from extensive investments in exploitation and exploitation manpower is no sudden discovery.

"WE HAVE FORTIFIED OURSELVES"

December and holiday campaigns already set, theatremen are now looking ahead, planning for February and March, in some instances preparing tentative arrangements even for later periods. It's that kind of a business. Your able showman, to be sure, keeps one eye on today's business but the other generally searches further afield for favorable spots where he can dig in to launch future boxoffice advances, to resist onslaughts upon grosses.

Back in early November, detailing his plans to bolster patronage during the pre-Christmas season, Roy Drachman, from the Fox, in Tucson, Arizona, wrote: "We have fortified ourselves with stunts of one kind or another for the three weeks preceding the holidays."

Effective campaigns take time to prepare, time to put over. Wise theatremen work far ahead leaving as little as possible to chance or dumb luck in the battle against seasonal opposition and other outside influences.

At a recent meeting of the local Junior League, that versatile maestro of the New Haven College Theatre, Ben Cohen, in his robust baritone sang the hit number from "Gay Desperado" as a buildup for that picture. Next thing we expect to hear is that Ben was found swinging from tree to tree on the Yale campus while giving out that call to advertise "Tarzan."

That noise heard in the distance is not the rumbling of artillery in Spain. It's just the echo of the slow but sure crumbling of all those solemnly made New Year's resolutions.

LEON BRITTON AND THE SHANGHAI "SWING TIME" SETPIECE DISPLAY

Shanghai "Swing Time" Display Receives Newspaper Praise

The above reproduction of the quite unusual setpiece to publicize the dual dates on "Swing Time" at the Metropole and Cathay Theatres, in Shanghai, China, was reported by Leon Britton, manager, Peacock Motion Picture Co., to be one of the finest theatre displays ever created in that sector.

Animation was supplied by the pendulum at top which, swinging from side to side, gave the time of the next performance at both houses. The large Astaire-Rogers cutout containing the pendulum also swung continuously. The size, height and width of the display, may be indicated by the figure of Mr. Britton at lower left.

"Tell Us What You Did"

AND NOW THE DEVIL KNITS—OF ALL THINGS

Perry L. Lessy, at the Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, to impress vividly upon his patrons that the "Devil Is a Sissy," worked out an amusing street bally to sell the picture of that name.

Young fellow, dressed in a red hot devil costume, walked around carrying a sewing bag from which came strings of wool which he knitted industriously as he strolled. Pinned to his cape was a sign with the proper theatre credits.

Comerford Theatremen Compete for "Enemy" Prizes

As part of the program of cooperation to stimulate the "Better Business" drive sponsored by the Comerford cicuit, John Nolan announces prizes of $500 to be awarded by Goldwyn on behalf of "Beloved Enemy" selected to inaugurate the event. Money will go to the managers showing the greatest percentage increase over normal gross with exploitation and publicity given consideration in determining the winners. In addition, Merle Oberon has offered an inscribed watch and Brian Aherne a console model radio.

Nolan together with Ernie Schmidt, of the circuit, and Andy Smith, of United Artists, comprise the committee of judges.

Topeka Mayor Proclaims "Harry McClure" Week

They evidently like Harry McClure in Topeka, Kan., and to aid his district in the Fox theatres 17-week contest, the Mayor proclaimed a "McClure Week" and the newspapers got behind the drive to urge attendance at the local Fox houses. There was lots of publicity and the ads carried photos of personnel in the district.

Also interesting was a series of two-column type ads headed: "What Prominent Topekans Say," copy plugging the prize drive and signed by local prominents. Example of these displays is reproduced. Copy not only plugged the popularity of the division chief but also was cleverly tied in institutionally to the participation of Fox theatres in civic drives.

M-G-M Sponsors Amateur Contest

Originally created and produced with a 16-mm. camera by two young amateurs and made into a regular Pete Smith short by M-G-M, "Wanted—A Master," now released, is the keystone of an amateur movie contest sponsored by the producers in conjunction with Liberty Magazine. Prizes of $500 are offered for each amateur film which can be similarly re-produced as an M-G-M short and in the event that none of the entries hit that high, a total of $1,000 is to be divided among the best entries.

To further interest the estimated 750,000 amateur movie-makers of the nation, the producers are prepared to offer contracts for potential directorial talent, for originality in story treatment and for those appearing in the shorts who show some screen personality.

In addition to the wide publicity from magazine and producer, for use by theatremen, Herb Morgan, M-G-M shorts exploitation director, forwards a four-page pressbook on the tiein which includes all the information and also lists smart tieups such as free dog giveaways, pooch-patrol bally, screen tests for pet dogs, classified page tieup, together with stills, stories, etc.

Kansas City Welcomes Local "Gold Diggers"

The fact that two local girls who appeared in the picture and traveled with the recent "Gold Diggers of 1937" air unit were natives of Kansas City gave Louis Mayer, at the Mainstreet, a rare opportunity to build up a smart advance as far ahead as three weeks before the plane visited the city.

The dailies ran photos of the local girls and stories for the first break and then followed with frequent publicity and art up to and during the time the troupe was in town. Mayer also landed shots on picture pages and in Sunday roto sections with much of the advance including note of the coming date for the picture.

WHAT PROMINENT TOPEKANS SAY!

I understand that the Fox circuit of theaters is offering a substantial bonus for the district that leads in attendance over a seventeen weeks' period ending December 26th.

The Fox Theatres in this community have generously supported every civic endeavor and we sincerely hope that the people of Topeka will support them and their employes in their endeavor to land the grand prize of $12,500.00 which will be divided among the employes in the towns of the winning district.

At the present time I understand that Harry McClure's Topeka district is in the lead. It is our hope that the people will give them all the support possible during this, the last week of their big drive.

Very truly,
MARK DREHMER.

Announcement of Plaque Prizes and Sheepskin Certificates Made as the Competitions Sweep Into the Fourth Year; 1937 Judges Endorse Project

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Fortified by the universal cooperation of all branches of the industry, spurred by the enthusiasm of theatremen everywhere, the Quigley Awards for 1937 enter into their fourth year as the New Year officially opens the competitions for January. The Big Race is on as entries crowd the going, seeking footing for a commanding position in the early stages of what is regarded in all quarters as the biggest and best year yet.

Little, if any, changes have been made in the rules and regulations for 1937, for so well have these served their purpose that general opinion rules no necessity for amendment. The purpose of simplifying the conditions of entrance is to be adhered to and a study of the rules on this page will find no onerous restrictions for theatremen in every part of the world who wish to compete.

Again, the Silver and Bronze Plaques will be awarded monthly, as will the First and Honorable Mention Sheepskin Certificates. Monthly winners again are to be selected by majority vote of the monthly Judging Committees and Grand Awards for the year are also intended.

Only two changes are contemplated at this writing, first, extending the monthly deadlines possibly a week later so as to make sure that all entries will reach Awards Headquarters in time. And secondly, there are plans now afoot to cut down the number of Honorable Mentions with the idea of making 1937 Competitions even keener than they have been—and that's covering a lot of territory.

But whatever changes are made in the rulings will be effected so that a man who lands one of the monthly Awards will certainly feel that he stands out in putting over his shows, and well merits the plaudits of his brother-showmen and recognition of his superiors.

On the next four pages are set down some of the endorsements of the industry executives who have accepted appointment to the Judging Committees of 1937. Many of these ranking names have served in every year of the Competitions and it is to be noted that their enthusiasm for the Awards continues to mount. But the theatremen in the field are no whit less spontaneous in their approval and what various of the boys have to say about it will be published in our next issue with added judges' endorsements.

The Big Race is on, gentlemen, and good fortune attend you all.

1937 JUDGES ENDORSE AWARDS

NEIL AGNEW

General Sales Manager,
Paramount Pictures, Inc.

I will be most happy to serve as one of the judges of the Quigley Awards Competition for 1937.

It is to be hoped Motion Picture Herald keeps up this good work as I feel through the medium of these Quigley Awards a lot of splendid talent is brought to light that otherwise would not become known. The Awards undoubtedly stimulate the development of this manpower in the field.

President,
Grand National Films, Inc.

I will be pleased to serve as a judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1937. You may count on my services in this connection.

Competition is not only the life of trade but the essence of showmanship as well. The Quigley Awards, by throwing the spotlight on noteworthy theatre campaigns render a most valuable service, not only to the individuals involved but to the entire motion picture industry by elevating standards and charting new channels of activity.

President & Treasurer
Butterfield Theatres

I will be glad to be of whatever assistance I can in cooperating with you as a Judge on the Committee for the Quigley Awards for 1937.

H. D. BUCKLEY

Vice-President,
United Artists Corp.

I will be very happy to serve as a Judge on the Committee for 1937 in connection with the Quigley Awards Competitions.

JOHN D. CLARK

General Sales Manager
Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp.

If it is at all possible I will serve as a Judge on the Quigley Awards for 1937 for I believe that the Quigley Awards for the best advertising in field exploitation are certainly stimulating to the box office.

HARRY ARTHUR

Fanchon & Marco Theatres
St. Louis, Mo.

Might I extend to you my congratulations for continuing the Quigley Awards competition for 1937?

The Quigley Awards have proven a great stimulant for showmen throughout the nation. It has encouraged them to exercise their ingenuity and inventiveness, all of which is reflected in mounting box office grosses in their theatres.

I believe theatre managers everywhere should be encouraged to participate in this worthwhile competition.

I am honored to serve as a Judge on your Committee for 1937.

Showmen Should Send in Campaigns, Says Depinet

Thank you for inviting me to serve on the judges' committee for the Quigley Awards during 1937. Gladly I accept.

The effectiveness of the Quigley Awards as a medium for stimulating exploitation efforts and, ergo, box office returns, requires no endorsement from me or any other picture executive. The record of results over a period of years speaks for itself.

It is a great pleasure to me to find each time I am called upon to be one of the judges that the number of campaigns submitted in this splendid competition is greater than the last time. Still I know there are many expert showmen who do not bother to send in their campaigns, and we all wish that they would. If not interested in the glory or the prize themselves, they should at least, for the general good of the industry and helpfulness to the younger managers, demonstrate what they are doing and pass on their selling ideas to others. I always find the Managers' Round Table Club section of the Motion Picture Herald very interesting.—NED E. DEPINET, President, RKO Distributing Corporation.

LEON J. BAMBERGER

Sales Promotion Manager
RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

Certainly, I will be happy indeed to serve on the Committee of Quigley Awards Judges for 1937.

I have always believed that the Quigley Awards constitute the greatest incentive to the exhibitor and theatre manager for bigger and better exploitation. Occasionally the picture companies offer prizes for exploitation but the Quigley Awards seemingly go on forever and give the showman something to consistently strive for regardless of what attractions he may be playing.

EDWARD FINNEY

Director of Advertising and Publicity
Grand National Films, Inc.

I appreciate your invitation to act as one of the judges on the 1937 Committee for the Quigley Awards Competition, and am very happy to accept.

I believe that the Quigley Awards serve as a distinct asset to the industry not only in giving prominence to individual effort but also by bringing to the attention of showmen many new and unique methods by which product may be merchandised to the public.

P. D. COCHRANE

Director of Publicity and Advertising
Universal Pictures Corp.

I will be glad to serve on the Judging Committee for 1937.

I have heard many fine comments on the friendly competitive spirit stimulated among showmen by the Quigley Awards. Because of this, all the winners stand out above the crowd and may well be proud of the distinction accorded them through their selection.

PRAISE QUIGLEY PROJECT HIGHLY

Hicks Is Positive Awards Stimulate Foreign Offices

I gladly accept the honor that you have conferred upon me, and will be pleased to serve as a judge on the committee for 1937 of the Quigley Awards Competitions.

I think that you have done a great job this year, and there is no doubt in my mind that the Quigley Awards play a great part in stimulating better advertising, exploitation and publicity efforts on the part of the men in the foreign field, all of which is reflected in better box office grosses.

Practically all of our Foreign Offices take great interest in the Quigley Awards Competitions, and being human, they not only appreciate winning the plaques and gaining honorable mention, but they do like to see "their names in the paper." You can count on us for our support and co-operation throughout the coming year.—JOHN W. HICKS, JR., Vice-President, Paramount Pictures Inc.

OSCAR A. DOOB

Director of Advertising and Publicity
Loew's Theatres

Congratulations on winding up another year of Quigley Awards, one of the finest stimulants that this old exploitation business has. Naturally, I'll be glad to serve as a 1937 Judge and this may also be taken as my acceptance for 1938, 1939 and 1940.

You are doing fine work and everybody owes you cooperation.

JOHN DOWD

Director of Advertising and Publicity
RKO Theatres

I will feel honored to serve as a Judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1937.

I want to thank you very much for your cooperation in the past year and assure you that I will be available any time you call on me to judge in the new year.

EDWARD M. FAY

Fay Theatres
Providence, R. I.

I am pleased to be of service to your organization in acting as a Judge upon the Committee for the 1937 Awards.

The lasting good accomplished through these Competitions is proven through the steady progress made in the increase of grosses and the promotions made among the winners.

ARTHUR FRUDENFELD

Divisional Director, RKO Theatres
Cincinnati, Ohio

I will be delighted to serve as judge on the 1937 Committee for the Quigley Awards.

There is no question but that the idea in back of the Award presentations is a splendid one, as an incentive for publicity men and managers to put their best foot forward in the building of aggressive and complete campaigns.

ROBERT M. GILLHAM

Director of Advertising and Publicity
Paramount Pictures, Inc.

I am sure everyone in the motion picture business feels that the Quigley Awards are extremely stimulating to the men in the field. To know that a job you have done is recognized in official quarters is extremely gratifying to those men on the firing line. I accept your invitation to act as a Judge in 1937.

MONROE GREENTHAL

Director of Advertising and Publicity
United Artists Corp.

Thanks for asking me to serve as a judge for your Quigley Awards for 1937. I certainly would be delighted to and think that you and the Motion Picture Herald have done a marvelous job in stimulating picture exploitation.

I know that many of our own exploitation men have the Quigley Awards so much on their mind that whenever one of their theatres' stunts even gets an Honorable Mention they sort of flaunt it in my face to prove how well they handled the picture.

General Manager
M. A. Shea Theatrical Enterprises

I will be pleased to serve as one of the Judging Committee for the Quigley Awards in 1937.

PAUL GULICK

Director of Publicity
Universal Pictures Corp.

Thanks for inviting me to serve again as one of the Quigley Awards Judges in 1937.

One of the most overlooked men in the business is the exploitation man. Unless he steps out of line to publicise himself, the boss is the only man wo knows how good he is. The agency of the Quigley Awards has stepped in to rescue many a clever theatre man from oblivion, but more than that, it has served to point out to the entire industry the great importance of real box office exploitation.

W. RAY JOHNSTON

President
Sterling Pictures

I shall be glad to serve as one of the Judges on the Committee for 1937 in connection with the Quigley Awards Competitions.

Unique in the field, the Quigley Awards fill a definite and important place in the industry's sun. Affording a vigorous incentive to exploitative talent, these awards are a constant source of new ideas of definite showmanship value. They are important to the exploiteer as a stimulus to greater and more resourceful efforts; and to the exhibitors as examples of creative thinking applied to box-office grosses.

Nothing is so old as yesterday's newspaper—and I might add, unless it be a worn-in-the-groove exploitation campaign. We are in constant need of new angles for merchandising our pictures, new slants in stimulating the imagination of our patrons, new channels through which we can direct our sales campaigns. In rapidly changing times, accepted, long standing methods of sales approach frequently surprise us when they are found wanting. The exploiteer deserves every encouragement the industry can give him. I know of no better medium than the Quigley Awards.

WM. K. JENKINS

Secretary-Treasurer, L. & J. Theatres,

Atlanta, Ga.

It will give me much pleasure to serve on the Quigley Awards Committee and I hope I can attend some of the meetings in New York.

I feel this feature of the Motion Picture Herald is most important as it stimulates interest among the managers in selling their product to the very best advantage.

LIONEL H. KEENE

Southern Division Director, Loew's Theatres

Atlanta, Ga.

Thanks for your invitation to serve as Judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1937. It will be a pleasure.

Personally, I think you're doing a very fine job for the benefit of theatremen throughout the country through the Managers' Round Table Club. The very fact that the idea has been renewed each year, speaks for itself.

H. F. KINCEY

North Carolina Theatres, Inc.

Charlotte, N. C.

It is with great pleasure that I accept the invitation to serve as a Judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1937.

JULES LEVY

General Sales Manager

R-K-O Distributing Corp.

Thank you for the invitation to serve again as a Judge during 1937 on your Committee for the Quigley Awards Competitions. It will be a pleasure to serve.

The Quigley Awards have been an incentive for better showmanship, stimulating the interest of theatre managers and advertising men, and have resulted in bringing due recognition for their outstanding efforts. Your department in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in my opinion, is not only one of the most interesting sections of the book, but a truly constructive force in our industry.

HARRY E. KALMINE

Zone Manager, Warner Theatres

Pittsburgh, Pa.

You may rest assured that I shall be very happy to again serve on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1937.

It is my contention that the Quigley Awards have in the past served as a definite incentive for our men in the field to outdo themselves in their application exploitation of pictures and I am glad to see that this merit system will continue.

Director,

Rialto Theatre, New York City

I will be honored to again act as a judge of the Quigley Awards. If you refer to some of my past communications you will note how highly I value these competitions. The march of time has in no way diminished my enthusiasm.

Increased Grosses Due to Awards, Says Einfeld

I shall be very happy to accept your invitation to serve as one of the Judges on the Committee for the Quigley Awards Competitions for 1937.

There is no doubt as to the value of the Quigley Awards in urging theatremen on to better efforts. The competitive spirit among the men in the field in their attempts to win the monthly Quigley Plaques has certainly resulted in increased grosses in many of the theatres throughout the country.

Best wishes and good luck for 1937, which year should see one of the most profitable in our industry.—S. CHARLES EINFELD, Director of Advertising and Publicity, Warner Bros. Pictures.

IRVING LESSER

Managing Director,

Roxy Theatre, New York

I shall be happy to serve as a Judge on the 1937 Committee of the Quigley Awards Competitions.

I have enjoyed very much the opportunity of serving as a Judge because I have observed the extent that managers will exert themselves to in order to put over a picture. It has been a constant guide to us here at the world's largest theatre because we are steadily reminded that we must keep stepping in order to keep up with the competition of live-wire managers and publicity men in other cities.

S. BARRET McCORMICK

Director of Advertising and Publicity

RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

It will be a great pleasure to serve as one of the judges on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1937.

The Quigley Awards for showmanship, in the splendid department, Managers' Round Table Club, is in my opinion, one of the most valuable and constructive influences in our business.

CHARLES C. MOSKOWITZ

General Theatres Executive

Loew's Theatres

Of course, I'll be glad to serve as one of the 1937 Judges. We are always glad to do what we can to cooperate with the Quigley Awards. We feel that the idea is a stimulant to exploitation.

Advertising Manager

20th Century-Fox Films Corp.

I will be glad to serve as a Judge for the 1937 Quigley Awards.

I have followed the monthly Awards closely and with the utmost interest during the past year. They have done much to develop showmanship and able exploitation to its present high standards and I believe your weekly Round Table is invaluable for interchanging ideas among theatremen throughout the country.

FIND SHOWMANSHIP ENCOURAGED

Represent Highly Prized Distinction, Says Dietz

Thank you for your letter inviting me to serve as a Judge on the Committee for 1937 in connection with the Quigley Awards. You can count on me.

Friendly competitive effort is the key to the best results in any line of business. Each person whose job is to exploit pictures likes to feel that his ideas, if good, will receive due recognition.

The Quigley Awards have put a premium on originality and creativeness, the two mainsprings of the motion picture industry. In this way they have brought practical showmanship to a higher pinnacle of accomplishment.

These Awards now represent a highly prized and eagerly sought distinction for the men in the promotion field, comparable to the Academy awards for the stars, directors and writers in Hollywood.—HOWARD DIETZ, Director of Advertising and Publicity, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures.

R. J. O'DONNELL

General Manager

Interstate Circuit Inc.

I am happy again to act as judge with the Committee on the 1937 Quigley Awards. It is indeed a pleasure for me to be a figure in the awarding of the Quigley Plaques in 1937.

The Awards have been an impetus to showbusiness in spurring theatre managers to greater boxoffice grosses through exploitation efforts. The recent awarding of Quigley Plaques to two managers in Texas in the same month has done much to put the other managers in our territory on their toes. I am happy in having again been selected as one of the judges to decide winners during the coming year.

Vice-President

R-K-O Export Corp.

I shall be glad to serve as a Judge on the Committee for 1937 to determine the winners in the Quigley Awards Competition.

WILLIAM F. RODGERS

General Sales Manager

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures

For the practical and ingenious way in which they have stimulated exploitation activity throughout the country I believe the Quigley Awards have performed a distinct service to the picture industry.

In my contacts with theatremen throughout the country I have found an attitude of keen interest in the competition sponsored by the Managers Round Table Club.

Showmen throughout the country may look forward toward a continuation of these Awards next year. Whatever is new and fresh and interest-compelling cannot fail to be reflected in added receipts at the box-office. I know that the Quigley Awards have provided such a stimulus, and there is no doubt they will continue to do so.

GEORGE J. SCHAEFER

Vice-President, General Manager

United Artists Corp.

Have your letter in which you ask that I serve as a Judge for the 1937 Quigley Awards.

You certainly can count on me as I will be very glad to serve on this Committee.

Advertising Manager

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures

The Quigley Awards have become not merely an honor to be sought but they have stimulated the widespread activities of theatremen in increasing attendance through promotion of attractions. Our job is to help exhibitors make more money with our pictures and you're helping to do it.

I will of course be pleased to serve as a Judge in 1937.

RICK RICKETSON

General Manager, Fox Inter-Mountain Theatres

Denver, Colo.

Will be glad to serve on the Quigley Awards Competitions as a judge on the Committee for 1937. I believe this is one of the most constructive national efforts to stimulate better showmanship and an intensification of the theatres participating will be a fine thing for both production and distribution.

A. W. SMITH, JR.

General Sales Manager

United Artists Corp.

The Quigley Awards for exploitation and box-office activity have proved to be a very virile medium for not only stimulating the minds of theatre operators but of achieving bigger and better grosses at the box-office.

I am very happy indeed that the Quigley Awards Competitions are to continue for 1937 and shall be proud to serve as Judge on the Committee.

General Theatre Executive

Loew's Theatres

I will be very happy to serve as a Judge on your Quigley Awards Committee for 1937.

DAVID E. WESHNER

Zone Manager, Warner Theatre

Philadelphia, Pa.

I readily agree to continue as a member of the Quigley Awards Competition Committee.

I want you to know that the first thing I open the Herald to upon its receipt is the Managers' Round Table . . . I might say here that on any number of occasions I have been able to have my boys use quite a few of the stunts that were pulled, in addition to which the ideas as presented in the Round Table always manage to generate another idea either on my part or on the part of the boys in my division.

To my mind, this is the most important function of the trade journal, and the fact that managers from all over the country have an opportunity to be honored by the Quigley Awards unquestionably brings out the very best merchandising qualities of the smarter showmen in this business. I am for it 100 percent.

Women's Association Sponsors "Nine Days A Queen" Date

Situated in a college town, Manager Eddie Lewis, State, Salem, Oregon, put a roadshow presentation behind "Nine Days a Queen," date being built up to attract the upper strata by a tilt in admissions and sponsorship of Salem University Women's Association. For this, support slice of the gross was donated to the organization and the opening was handled by the local press as one of the social events of the season.

Public library was tied in to offer as suggested reading "Story of Lady Jane Grey," on which the picture is based, and further support was given the date by the schools' superintendent, who granted permission to students to attend the special school matinees, for which tickets were sold in each of the schools.

Van Noy Stages His Own "Charge of the Light Brigade"

Ping Pong Tournament Clicks for Bannan

To stimulate Friday night grosses, Manager George L. Bannan, at Edwards' Easthampton Theatre, Easthampton, L. I., recently concluded a four-weeks' table tennis, or ping-pong tournament with main prizes of cups that drew a lot of interest and kited receipts considerably. Aimed to build good will among the younger element, contests were held on the stage between teams representing local and neighboring fire departments and two country clubs.

Tournament was run for four straight Friday nights during November, each comprising two single matches and one doubles. Table was borrowed from the fire laddies and the contest plugged in newspapers, lobby posters, cards in clubs and fire departments plus weekly front page story. The idea did all expected of it and more, says George, but suggests that in similar tournaments contest be confined to doubles matches which he finds are more interesting to patrons.

Doubles Contest Used For "Go West Young Man"

Through tieup with cooperating merchants, Ken Mead, Main Theatre, Pueblo, Col., for "Go West, Young Man," put on a Mae West doubles contest with prizes going to those dressing themselves in mother's old-fashioned dresses and most closely resembling the star. Entry blanks were run in paper, which came through with some neat publicity on the stunt to build up high interest.

Off-duty ushers hitchhiked around town with cards on their backs, sidewalk chair gag was also used, fellow sitting in front of theatre with copy on chair reading "first in line to see," etc. Wisecrack classified ad contest was planted in the Pueblo Star-Journal, tickets going to those spotting Westicisms scattered throughout ads.

Goetz and Shure Cooperate On Large Campaign for Short

It seems that cartoonist Ray Gross, creator of the "Can It Be Done" newspaper strip, is a local boy, and when Vitaphone made a one-reel novelty, "An Ounce of Invention," based on these drawings, the short was given a lot of attention by Joe Goetz and Manny Shure at the RKO Albee in Cincinnati.

Featured was a three-panel lobby display of original drawings, ideas used by the author in the short, books, magazine articles and newspaper clips from papers syndicating the strip (see photo). One of the house staff was stationed at the exhibit to explain the various drawings. Reel was underlined in all ads and papers ran shots of patrons examining the display. Inquiring reporter broadcast was also arranged in the lobby with commentator inviting onlookers to give their opinions on the subject.

Boucher Throws Rice Party For "Wedding Present"

To make the folks feel in the mood, Frank Boucher promoted small paper bags of rice for advance on "Wedding Present" at the Metropolitan, Baltimore, copy suggesting patrons use it on the playdates which were run with the title and theatre. Bags were promoted from local store in return for copy on reverse side.

For "Three Men on a Horse," Boucher put out a racing tip-sheet headed Today's Best Bet, a Hot Tip for People with Horse-Sense. Reverse was lettered: "Oiwin's Dope Sheet, given absolutely free to those who enjoy a good laugh." Inside spread carried picture copy.

Conhaim's Star Masks Plug "Swing Time"

While at the RKO 58th Street Theatre, in New York, John Conhaim, now at the RKO Palace, worked out an effective advertising medium on his "Swingtime" date by means of star masks which he made up himself and planted in good windows all through the neighborhood, including smart Fifth Avenue shops. Conhaim covered a wide territory in sections where good windows are at a premium and where the conventional window display or card will not be used.

In addition, full page co-op with a misspelled capital letter contest was put on with the Long Island Daily Star, from which section the theatre draws heavily. Packard cars touring the district carried copy and posters with usher and hostess wearing the star masks with others mounted on the running board (see photo).

Footballs Exploit "Ziegfeld"

With "The Great Ziegfeld" opening during the height of the football season in Toronto, Mort Margolius, College Theatre, distributed cardboard footballs on which was printed title, playdates and copy "you'll get a kick out of this, the greatest of all musicals." Sound truck bally was used on main street, title flashes were erected in shadow boxes atop marquee and airbrushed front was designed for opening.

MONTHLY CALENDAR PROGRAMS FOUND EFFECTIVE BY ROUND TABLERS ED. SELLETE AND MIKE GUTTMAN

Various Calendar Types Created for Programs

Among the advertising standbys that pay their way right along are the monthly calendars which right now are enjoying a profitable vogue. Two representative layouts are reported by Mike Guttman, of the Colonial, in Watertown, South Dakota, and Eddie Selette, of the Albany, in Albany, New York. Both are illustrated above.

The Guttman calendar is spaced according to the length of the dates on the pictures. Selette's is laid out as a regular calendar with separate spaces for each day of the month with the dates in heavy bold type so that the overprinting of the spaces will not interfere with legibility of quick reading. Calendars are distributed by the theatremen with the merchants' ads as illustrated paying the cost.

$1,000 Music Giveaway

Started late in November and finishing on Dec. 16th, a series of weekly musical nights tied in with amateur shows and giveaways was put over successfully by Manager Bob Rosenthal, at the Ritz, Albany, N. Y., to combat the pre-holiday slump. Local music school was promoted for $1,000 in musical instruments, instructions and other prizes. Trailer was run to explain the idea and school printed for distribution coupons for the drawing and heralds. Instruments were displayed in lobby with five given away each week plus credits for music courses.

Seff's Two-Column Ad on "Bengal Tiger"

Seff Makes Six Castings For "Bengal Tiger" Ad

Theatremen in spots where house artists are not available to make up display ads depend a lot upon their own ingenuity in creating effective layouts. In many instances they manage to do smart work, the two-column flash reproduced to left being a good example.

It's from Ely E. Seff, of the Tri-States Spencer Theatre, in Rock Island, Ill., for "Bengal Tiger." Seff reports using three of the regular exchange mats and with the mat on the second feature had six castings made, all in all, to turn out the finished ad.

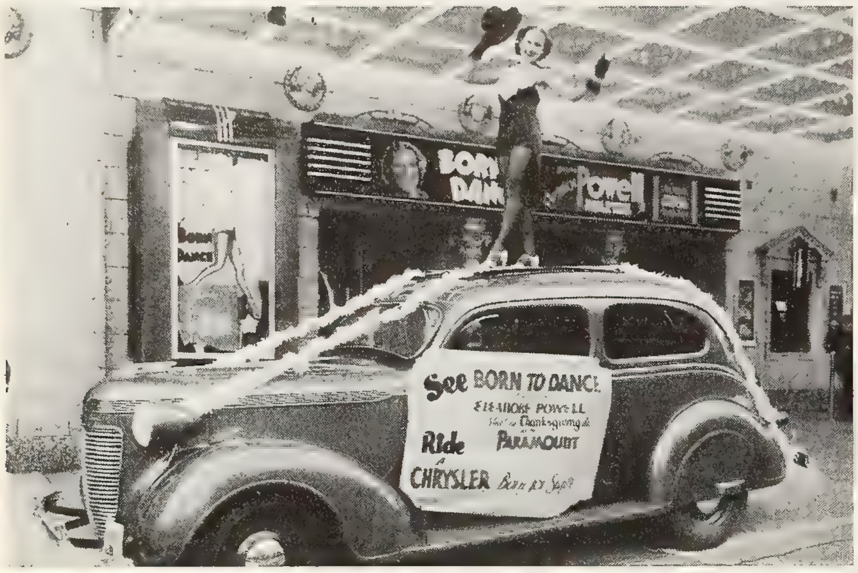
Giant Cards to Taylor Aid "Camille" Advance

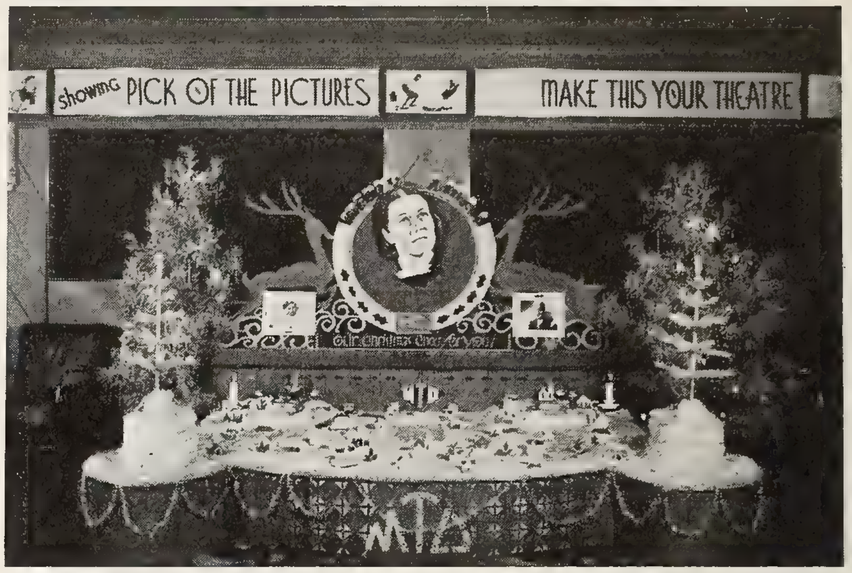
Theatremen already are building up their dates on "Camille," and among the slants favored is the giant postcard signed by local patrons and sent out to the MGM studios. Recently Manager E. E. Crabtree, Fischer, Danville, Ill., obtained 400 signatures under an expression of appreciation to Robert Taylor and forwarded it with no other address than a picture of the star on the address side.

Similar slant was put on by Manager Max Kuperstein, Harrowgate, Philadelphia, who had hundreds of signatures penned to a huge scroll. In both cases Taylor posed with the greetings and copies of the shot will be available to Crabtree and Kuperstein for buildup on the coming date.

WHAT'S WHAT HERE AND THERE

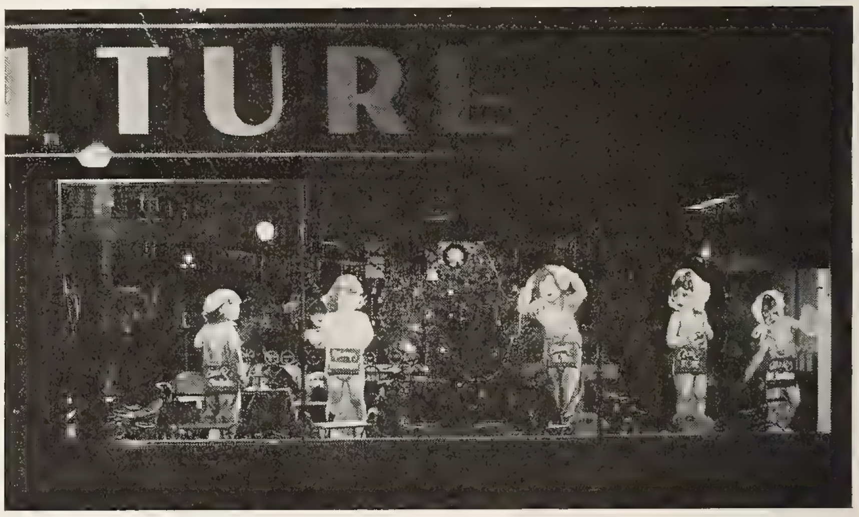


DANCIN' ON THE ROOF. On the roof of course of a new Chrysler promoted by Ted Emerson and MGM's Claud Morris for the date on "Born to Dance" at the Paramount, Omaha. Girl atop the car cut a few steps as the car made the rounds.

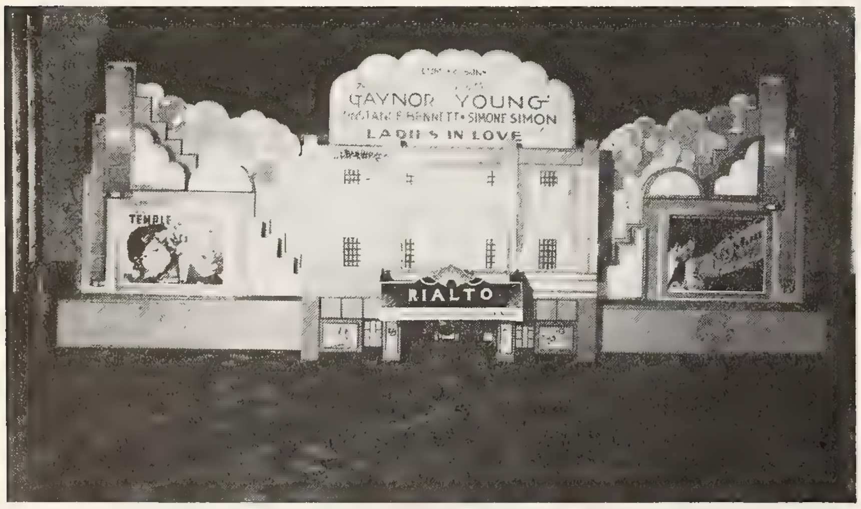


CHRISTMAS DISPLAY. Snow-blanketed village in miniature awaiting Santa Claus was the theme of Henry T. Kimmel's lobby display for Christmas at the Ritz, in Panama City, Fla. Flash was bordered by real trees and decorative background.

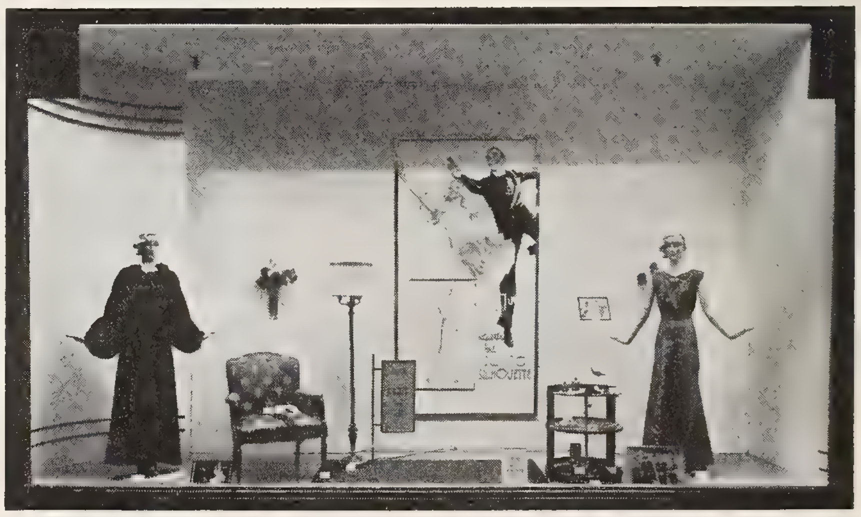
MODELS PATRONS. To convey the atmosphere of the picture, for the date on "Rembrandt" at Keith's Memorial, Boston, Jack Granara planted an artist in the lobby and invited patrons to be sketched free of charge. There was no lack of models.



THERE'S ALWAYS A WAY. When Bert Jackson could not land a window for "Reunion" on account of the Christmas rush, for the date at the Fox, Corning, N. Y., he sold prominent store on using the quin cutouts to embellish the displays.



LITTLE THEATRE. In the foyer of the Rialto, North Little Rock, Ark., Earl E. Hicks, house artist, constructed this display of poster board and corobuff paper. Flash is a reproduction of the Rialto front with display and lighting effects on coming attractions.



SIX, COUNT 'EM, SIX. That was the total of main windows in leading store landed by Manager Frank Wills to sell the style angles on "Swingtime" at the Metropolitan, Winnipeg, Canada. Above is one of the displays that brought the folks in crowds.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1936, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1936-37 season.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Weslaco, Texas

Dear Herald:

This letter is liable to be a hodgepodge, a little of everything, a mixture of succotash and something else, if you know what I mean. It will be a little style show, some fishing and a little of something else, but not much of anything in particular.

But maybe we better tell you where Weslaco is. Weslaco is located in the Rio Grande valley between Harlengen on the east and Mission on the west, with McAllen and a few other towns between, and Weslaco is where they held their flower, vegetable and citrus fruit fiesta the past week, and the regrettable part of it is that you couldn't have been here to see the show, for it was a World's Fair, Barnum and Bailey circus and a Rose Bowl carnival all in one.

Weslaco has become one of the principal towns of the valley. She has some rivals, of course. All of them have to step on the gas to keep up with her, and the most of them are getting a little short on gas.

The principal feature of the show was her flower exhibit and style show. The flower exhibit was held in the city auditorium, which covers half of a block and contained flowers of all kinds and descriptions, not the hothouse kind that the ladies of the north have in pots in their parlor windows, but flowers that were growing outside in flower gardens. Just think of it, a flower exhibit in the middle of December, every specimen of flowers that are grown. It was a wonderful show and we wish we could describe it for you, but our botanical knowledge runs more to corned beef and cabbage.

Then they had a style show, and here again we are out on a limb, we can't describe this wonderful show. You remember we tried to describe the style show held at Mission recently and how miserably we failed. Well, anyhow, they had a promenade walk built in the main street which was about four feet high, six feet wide and about half of a block long, and along each side were oodles of electric lights, and along this promenade the ladies, dressed in evening gowns, promenaded with gowns covered with flowers, fruit and vegetables which were sewed on the gowns in all kinds of fancy designs.

We got there too late to get seats by this promenade but we did get there in time to have a very lovely visit with Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Wood. Mr. Wood manages the Weslaco theatre. We also met their assistant, Shelton Young. Mr. Wood took ourself and party up in the balcony of his theatre, where we could get a good view of this style show. In fact, we had the best location of any of the eight thousand who were there, as the promenade was right in front of the theatre. That's what we call courtesy, and Mr. Wood is chock full of it.

Then Mr. Wood brought Jack Lamb up in the balcony and introduced us to him. But maybe you don't know who Jack Lamb is. Jack is the world-famous fly and bait caster and a fisherman of experience who has us beaten a mile and back. He is in the employ of the Gulf Oil Company and travels all of the United States giving exhibitions on fly and bait casting and distributing the company's literature. Jack has caught the red snappers in the gulf at Point Isabel, the tarpon at Aransas Pass, Texas. He has caught bass in the Michigan lakes, muskies in Minnesota, has whipped the Brule river in Wisconsin for rainbows, and fought the steel head salmon in the Rogue river in Oregon. Jack wrote an article, entitled "Why I Like to Fish," and it was published by the Gulf company in pamphlet form, and you sportsmen can secure a copy free by addressing the Gulf Oil Company at Fort Worth, Texas, P. O. Box 1290. You will find that this article will describe many experiences and joys you yourself have had. In reading it we are reminded of our early fishing experiences on the Kankakee river in Indiana, of catching northern pike at Park Rapids, Minnesota, and of whipping the riffles of the Spokane river in Washington for the gamey rainbows. You will recall many happy experiences when you read Jack's article. And we will recall our very pleasant visit to Weslaco and with Mr. and Mrs. Wood.

McAllen, Texas

This town of McAllen is where the most of the northern tourists come to spend the winter, and the hotels, apartment houses and tourist camps are full to capacity. It seems that all north of the Mason and Dixon line are down here, and McAllen is providing them with every kind of entertainment possible. They come here partly for the climate, partly for the citrus fruit, but mostly, we surmise, for the shows that L. J. (Shine) Mason puts on at the Palace and Queen theatres, and what we mean is that he puts 'em on too. Shine certainly knows how to pick his shows as well as how to pick his theatre force.

There is this about these young ladies: they are all of them Herald fans and that goes a long way toward fixing everything O.K.

We ran across a fellow the other day here in McAllen by the name of George Whisler who claims to have come from Atkinson, Nebraska. We asked him if he knew a fellow up there by the name of Al Miller, who runs the Lyric theatre and he replied, "Do I? Well, I guess I do, I have tussled with him for years trying to get the belt away from him and couldn't do it. The belt he refers to has been held by Al ever since it was made. It was given to him for having the most fertile imagination and recounting hundreds of things, the most of which never happened, of any man in Holt county. Al's son, A. G. Miller, is interested in the theatre but is now one of Jim Farley's hired help.

Rain, rain, rain, and yet they tell us that it seldom rains in the Rio Grande valley. It has been at it now, off and on, more or less, for three days and nights, and is still at it. It looks like Noah could do a thriving business if he were here now. The weather here is a whole lot like it is in Hollywood, "very unusual."

The work down here is done mostly by Mexicans. They gather the fruit, work in the vegetable fields, and harvest most of the crops. Out in California the Japs do the bulk of the work, and in the southern states it is done principally by colored help, while the "poor white trash" tramp the highways looking for a job.

We notice that the freight trains are mostly manned by colored brakemen. The Interstate Commerce Commission fixes freight rates and that makes us wonder if that is why "Jones, he pays the freight."

A Fistful of DY

'BLACK

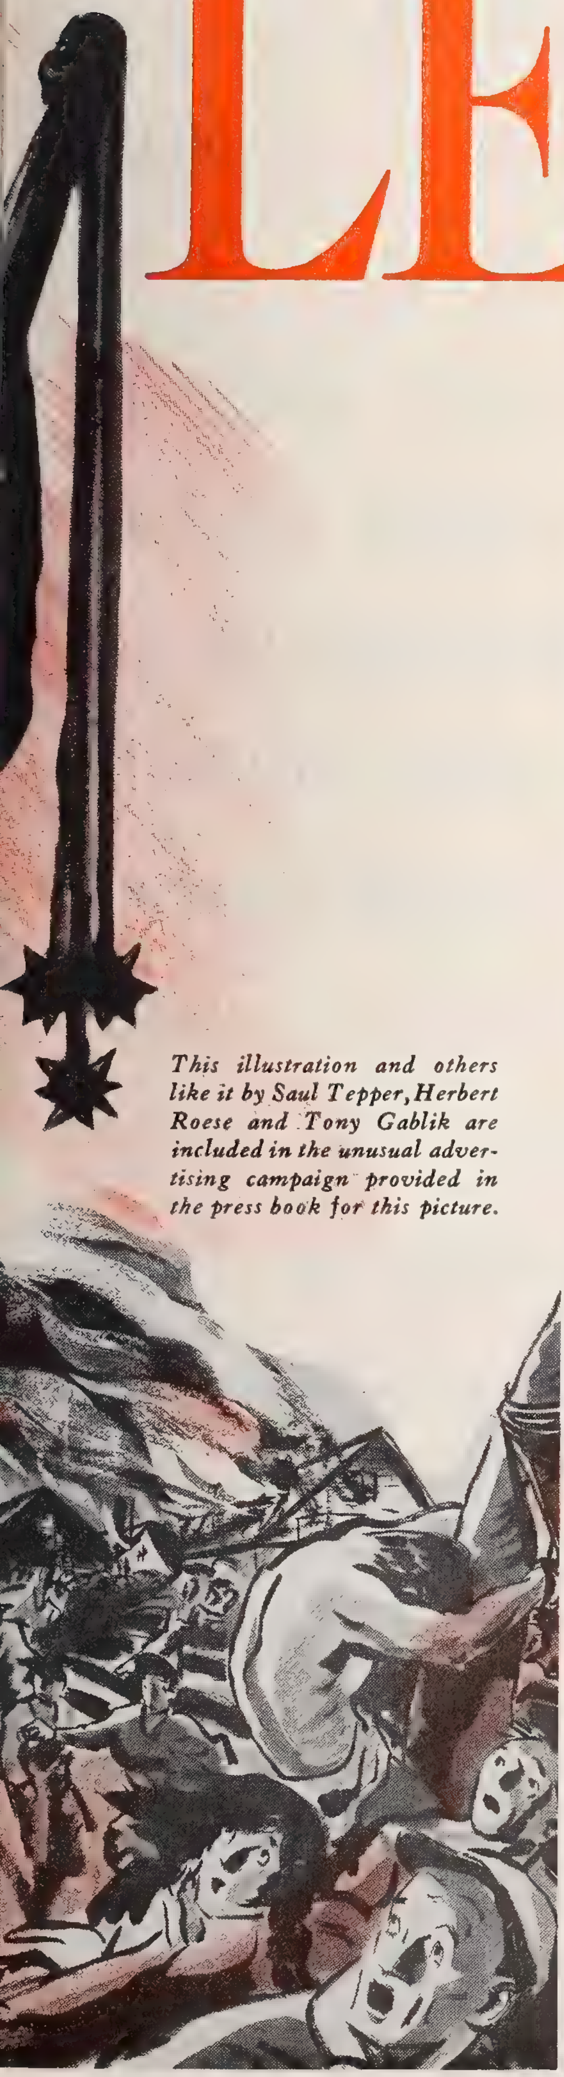
by RED KANN

Editor, Motion Picture Daily

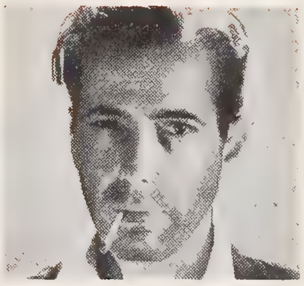
CELLULOID dynamite. That's "The Black Legion." Word has been trickling through from the coast for weeks now about this Warner picture. Archie Mayo spoke about little else when he was around a fistful of weeks back. But he directed and reservations seemed conservative, if not in order. Yet, now and fresh from the projection room, we recall the points he stressed, how he had persisted in his belief that this was an important job by the nature of the material and not from his part in it. In most instances, the good Hollywood folk talking about their own handiwork, must be pardoned for exaggeration; the coast air. In the instance of Mayo who has ranted and raved against routine stories and message-less vehicles, he is to be believed. Then, there was Harry Warner, who not far back, spoke off the record about this picture and urged that it be seen the minute available. . . .

Yesterday brought that minute. It brought a lot of minutes and most of them were jam-crammed through with excitement and horror and repulsion over the sorry reflection that, in this day and in these times, a monstrous, outside-the-law thing, such as the Black Legion, could exist and even thrive. Yet, of course, it did. The newspapers were full months ago and from the factual record and with little story embroidery

NAMITE about LEGION'



This illustration and others like it by Saul Tepper, Herbert Roese and Tony Gablik are included in the unusual advertising campaign provided in the press book for this picture.



HE'S THE KILLER!
Humphrey Bogart, unforgetably established in 'Petrified Forest', heads the cast of Warners' most daring exposé since 'I Am a Fugitive'!

and license the Warners have put together a crying indictment of only one phase of the political and religious bigotry that continues to stalk this land of the free and the brave. Little need was present to let Hollywood scenarists loose on an imagination tour. There was enough and more in the amazing and actual history of the terroristic organization to load any single feature with explosives. . . .

It is all there. While the foreword makes it very clear that what follows is based on no actual incidents or on fact itself, this will deceive no one who looks and, we hope, millions will for the good it has a chance of doing. Get no idea, moreover, that the Warners went public-spirited and sacrified their commitment to entertain. Not at all. It merely happens that this is one of those infrequent cases where a picture not only tells a chapter that ought to be told, but also tells it in terms of brutal and easily understood drama. "The Black Legion" moves motion pictures one notch forward in the recognition, eventually to come, that, although films may be designed chiefly to entertain, they must also go beyond in the cause of social problems. . . .

HIS WORD IS LAW!

Respected everywhere for their force and integrity are Red Kann's picture analyses. This one is reprinted from M. P. Daily of Dec. 30th.

All of this may sound like a wide and flying leap off the deep end on behalf of one lone attraction. It may even read like the hailing of the perfect picture. It is not the perfect picture. The earlier episodes, planting the contentment of Humphrey Bogart and his family, are extended and stretched pretty thin, no doubt to sharpen the contrast which follows his oath to the Black Legion, its incendiarisms, its floggings, its beatings and its murders. The strength is there because it is thoroughly inherent in the subject matter, the drama in the established record. Whitling its mass down, concentrating on highlights and filming them in climactic order—these are what Mayo has done. The story he was telling seemed well nigh impossible to defeat. .

The director grafted an excellent cast and striking types and saw to it that they did their tasks well. Bogart is splendid as the mechanic caught up in the false passions of the Legion; Erin O'Brien-Moore is very good as a wife. Inexorably and as it happened, the story moves to its close. Bogart, ready to face the music and leaning on the court to protect his threatened wife and child, in a torrent unleashed crumbles the fake defense, indicts his brother legionnaires. The sort of newspaper headline yarn which they do better than the others, you can thank the Warners and Mayo for no compromise finish, no phony end-of-the-sunset clinch.

Bogart goes to prison for the remainder of his life and along with him his criminal associates. They should have. They, or their counterparts, did in reality and on the screen they do it again. . . .

THE HOT POTATO

MANY and perhaps most good showmen will not be made unhappy at the present progress of the laying of the inhibiting hand of the law over the chance games and box office lotteries.

The situation is somewhat reminiscent of a spectacular predecent and parallel in the newspaper world when, now more than a decade ago, rival Chicago papers, warring for circulation, began cash giveaways in terms of hundreds of dollars a day and went flaming into a wild program of disbursing prizes of ten thousand a day—seeking at last on their own account government intervention to save them from their own folly.

THERE is, may be, a coloration of extenuation to be found for many of the exhibitors who have found, or felt, it necessary to meet competition in lottery exploitations to keep their enterprises alive. But if one is to admit the necessity, it is also necessary to make the unpleasant admission that collectively there has been something lacking in scruples, judgment and social responsibility. It may also be observed that with the demonstration of competency afforded in the performance of the industry in meeting the moral judgments of the majority of decent Americans in the pictorial merchandise of the screen, there might also be ground for having expected, before this, exercise of some of the same powers and pressures to protect the theatre, the house of the screen, from this epidemic of the gambling mania. The fact that the chance games took first nourishment in and under the auspices of the unorganized fringe of the industry constitutes no more argument for the defense than the fact that in that same marginal sector some few flagrantly immoral pictures are made, imported, and exhibited.

In the mining camps the roulette wheels always purred in hall adjacent to the bagnio of the scarlet kimonos. It may be progress to have removed the bagnio technique from the screen, but if the box office takes the methods of the place next door the victory for the status of the industry is a trifle less than complete. The reputation of the motion picture is made where the public meets the screen.

Gambling as a business has not been respectable in the United States since before the turn of the century.

AT the dawn of the chance game infection of the screen Motion Picture Herald made its declaration of policy, with the announcement of Quigley Publications that it would accept in no guise advertising or promotional matter pertaining to lotteries or their equivalents. It did not then require, any more than now, any remarkable insight to foresee that, in addition to all other considerations, here was direct invitation, once again, to regulative attentions from government.

The current situation in which the courts of the land are called upon to deal with box office lottery and near lottery operations is not calculated to enhance the status of the industry and support argument for its self-regulative independence in the issues of the social and political era now getting under way.

There was a consciousness of quite a number of considerations back of the remark of that distinguished legislative craftsman, Mr. Charles C. Pettijohn, addressing showmen in St. Louis, that the lottery system is a "hot potato."

The screen is for pictures.

PRO VERITAS

ACADEMICALLY one can have sympathy with Lord Mersey asking in the House of Lords that the government control films purporting to present history. He cited for provocation the screen Henry VIII, charging that the king was made "a comic buffon," and the fictional meeting of Mary and Elizabeth in "Mary of Scotland." His lordship would have an educational attache appointed to the British Board of Film Censors to prevent such liberties with fact.

Certain recent conspicuous proceedings and eventuations with reference to the British crown, history, and tradition, would suggest that in the large it would indeed be presumptuous for the screen's dramatists to hope to improve upon spontaneous performances of his lordship's noble and ecclesiastical contemporaries.

Meanwhile, what would my lord Mersey have done about Santa Claus?

MR. HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST, senator from Arizona, speaking in Washington, moves for the abolition of the words "very" and "quite" as useless and tending to weaken the language. It is very pleasing and appropriate for the senate to be giving some attention to the larger concerns of life. Meanwhile Senator Ashurst's lists may well be amplified before his movement jells into statute. He would like to prohibit, abolish and strike from our lexicons several words including: "smash," "crash" and "wow." Also we can do for a long time without "colorful" and "age-old."

This Week

Chance and the Law

The equivocal legal status of Bank Night and other theatre chance games was further complicated this week by a four to three decision of the New York state court of appeals which held that the games come within the law. Chicago circuit managers are reinstating the games after an injunction was gained by one theatre preventing police interference. Contradicting the New York decision, the Texas supreme court has ruled that Bank Night "is a gift enterprise involving the lottery principle" and is therefore unconstitutional.

Giveaway news is on page 29.

Trade Practices

Practically all attacks on the motion picture industry under the anti-trust laws have been actuated by complaints to the Department of Justice from within the industry itself, Assistant Attorney General John Dickinson said this week in a report to Congress. Mr. Dickinson is retiring after two years as head of the anti-trust division of the department. As Congress met it was indicated that proposals for Government regulation of industry would occupy the limelight. This week, too, Loew's, Inc., became the fourth company to accept, in part, the MPTOA trade practice program.

Trade practices and regulation are discussed on page 25.

Review and Prediction

Increased theatre attendance, a trend toward higher admissions, higher quality pictures and sustained high grosses during the Christmas season, were responsible for the exceptional financial showing made by the motion picture industry during 1936 and, continuing through 1937, are the basis for the prediction that the new year holds the brightest prospects for the industry in its history. R. H. Cochrane, president of Universal, and Sidney B. Self, writing for the Wall Street Journal, took these points as the theme of year-end financial surveys.

Their views are quoted on page 24.

Flavours Last

Out of the Black Hills and to Hollywood, vacation bent, has come Leo Peterson, general manager of the Black Hills Amusement Company, with word that trade-marks, company names and adequately advertised insignia of divers kinds have lost not but rather gained significance with the passage of time. Paramount, Calamity Jane and MOTION PICTURE HERALD are among the institutions cited in demonstration of his points.

Mr. Peterson's observations are reported on page 33.

Crime and the Screen

Crime and adventure stories when depicted on the motion picture screen are no more harmful to youth than the tales of hair-raising adventure told in books, many of which have earned a place as literature, in the view of Lord Hewart, British chief justice.

Lord Hewart's opinions, expressed at the British Kinematograph Society's annual dinner, are reported on page 34.

Super-Power Radio

The engineering division of the Federal Communications Commission will recommend, in a report to be submitted this month, changes in the federal radio regulations which will make possible a chain of 15 to 25 broadcasting stations operating on 500,000 watts. The changes include the opening of the 1,500-1,600 kilocycle band for general broadcasting.

The report is digested on page 32.

Decry 'Free' Publicity

Whatever other exhibitors may think, George Mann and Morgan Walsh, California circuit operators, conclude that "free" publicity, review "plugs" and pictorial displays in newspapers are valueless in small cities insofar as the box office is concerned.

The results of their three-year experiment on newspaper aids are explained on page 34.

Legislation

Nine communities this week were concerned with legislative measures directly affecting motion picture exhibitors. In most cases, the more drastic measures were new or revised tax bills that would affect gross receipts, and in others the problem of Sunday shows were the chief concern. In Minneapolis, the building ordinance which has had theatre operators up in arms for the past three months was finally revised and accepted by the city council.

Details are on page 24.

Paramount Jubilee

Two events scheduled this week in connection with the Adolph Zukor Silver Jubilee were the company's dinner on Thursday in honor of its chairman at the studio in Hollywood and the annual conference scheduled for the Hotel Ambassador there on Friday and Saturday to discuss coming product. At the same time, it was announced that the Broadway Merchants' Association in New York would have Mr. Zukor at a testimonial dinner when he arrives in Manhattan later this month.

The latest details of the Jubilee celebrations are on page 38.

Opera and Film

Neither opera, as which it would be but a transcription, nor film, as which it would be a contradiction, but opera and film, each in its proper time and place, is "I Pagliacci," the Trafalgar production of Leoncavallo's opera as directed by Karl Grune.

A considerable quotation from the director, flanked by reproductions of stills from his film, appears on pages 16-17.

Money Making Stars

Shirley Temple was the Biggest Money Making Star of 1936, the exhibitors of America decided in Motion Picture Herald's annual canvass of the theatres to determine which players' pictures brought the largest receipts to the showmen. It was Shirley Temple's second successive year at the top of the money makers. The Herald surveys began fourteen years ago. The latest poll also showed Buck Jones as The Money Making Star of Western productions.

Australian Production

On the premise that Quota legislation for New South Wales has failed, Cinesound, leading Australian producer, has determined not only to maintain regular production but also is adding a second unit to make outdoor pictures. Another new development in the Commonwealth is a decision of the Roman Catholic Hierachy of Australia to establish a censorship system paralleling that of the Legion of Decency.

These and other developments in Australia are recorded on page 40.

Viewing with Alarm

Mexico's own producers find that imported pictures are crowding their own completely off the screen. Of 500 films shown in a year, only twenty are Mexican made. That's why the Mexican Motion Picture Producers Union wants the government to enact legislation to provide more theatres for exhibition of domestic product, and a reduction of taxation.

Details are on page 38.

Camera Clean-Up

In a year-end clean-up of impressive proportions studio cameras clicked to dead center on 13 pictures, began to purr attention to but six new ones brought to stage and set. Major product distinguished both groupings.

Titles and other data pertinent to the product noted may be found on page 33.

Simplified

RKO and Universal, two of the major motion picture companies, last week simplified their corporate structure with the filing of papers in Delaware dissolving wholly-owned subsidiary corporations. The assets of Universal Pictures Corporation, which was dissolved, were taken over by Universal Pictures Company, Inc. Seven RKO subsidiaries were taken over by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

Details are found on page 32.

MPTOA Convention

The seventeenth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be held at the Miami Biltmore Hotel, Miami, Fla., on March 16th, 17th and 18th. Better theatre management will be the keynote of the session and lectures on this subject as well as displays and demonstration of equipment are scheduled.

Further details are on page 40.

Action on RKO Claims

Federal Judge William Bondy in New York last week confirmed the disallowance or reduction of claims against RKO amounting to $9,637,595, in accordance with the action taken on them in June, 1935, by Special Master Thomas D. Thatcher.

A list of the claims is found on page 32.

GB Expansion

That Gaumont British will soon open its own exchanges in key cities of the United States was indicated this week by Arthur Lee, vice-president of the American GB company. Mr. Lee, in Miami, was asked to comment on reports that 20th Century-Fox has said that it will not handle any pictures other than GB releases because of insufficient vault space.

His answer is quoted on page 24.

Business Surge

Theatres in the Chicago territory are jubilantly recording upsurging receipts following the holidays. The New Year weekend was reported the best in years by the Loop motion picture houses.

Details on page 62.

Operator Agreement

Attorneys representing Local 306, Operators' Union, and the Independent Theatre Owners Association in New York are nearing the completion of the final form of the agreement on wage scales and the like which virtually will end the multiple union situation in Manhattan, it was reported Tuesday. It was explained that following the completion of that arrangement, another will be made between Local 306 and the Allied Union, by which the membership of Allied will be absorbed by the former.

The completed agreement between the theatre group and the union will require ratification by the full membership of both bodies before becoming effective, and the same is true of the Allied-Local 306 agreement, which is described as in the nature of a formality, made necessary by legal procedure, the initial arrangement being the important one.

Sales Tax Hearing

The appeal of the distributing organizations from the appellate court's decision holding film rentals derived from theatres within New York City limits to be subject to the two per cent municipal sales tax has been placed on the court of appeals calendar in Albany for argument on January 18. Frederick H. Wood of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine and Wood, special counsel for the distributors, has completed his appeal brief which, in the main, challenges the constitutionality of the tax.

An appeal is being taken simultaneously by the city from that part of the appellate court's decision which exempted from tax rentals derived by local exchanges from theatres located beyond city limits.

Archive Film Project

R. D. W. Conner, national archivist in Washington, has asked the government for permission to make historical motion pictures of important national events. Ordinary motion pictures of such events as a Presidential inauguration, Mr. Conner said Tuesday, are not at all adequate for historical preservation.

Sterling-Monogram

Sterling Pictures has acquired the trade mark, good will and negatives of the former Monogram Pictures Corporation of New York and an amendment to the certificate of incorporation of Sterling has been filed in Delaware changing the name of that company to Monogram Pictures Corporation, W. Ray Johnston, president, said this week. The New York organization, which has been in process of liquidation for two years, is changing its name to W. Ray Johnston Enterprises, Inc., so that the Delaware company may register to do business in New York. All exchanges acquiring the new franchises will operate under the name of Monogram.

Officers of the new Monogram company, besides Mr. Johnston, are Scott R. Dunlap, vice-president; J. P. Friedhoff, treasurer, and M. S. White, secretary.

Stories for 20 of the 32 pictures for next year have been chosen, said Mr. Johnston.

Allied Meeting

From 25 to 30 directors of Allied States Association will attend the national annual convention of directors of the organization to be held at the Hotel Emerson, Baltimore, January 21-22. Scheduled on the program will be the election of officers, reports by committees, mapping of the 1937 program, and selection of the place for the 1938 convention. Nathan Yamins, president, and Abram F. Myers, general counsel, will speak.

This Week in Pictures

FAREWELL. John Dowd, director of advertising and publicity for RKO theatres, was tendered a bachelor dinner by film folk at the Edison Hotel, New York, December 28, 1936.

AU REVOIR. Francis Lederer, Columbia star, takes leave of Margo, featured in Columbia's "Lost Horizon," as he sets out on a personal appearance tour of the country. Columnists, radio chatterboxes, screen fans and plain gossips, not to mention press agents, have been reporting the couple engaged.

STARRED. Assia Moris, who appeared in several Italian films last season, is starred in "The Man Who Laughed," directed by Mario Camerini, original title of which is "Uomo Che Sorride."

DOWN TO EARTH. Actually, yes, but not, if rumor be credited, metaphorically, the young lady being Sonja Henie and the young man Tyrone Power, likeable young folk of the Twentieth Century-Fox stellar staff and, it is said, mutually likeable. Her latest picture is "One In a Million."

UNROMANTIC INTERVAL. Even to the fair, and even when the fair are Margot Grahame and Elizabeth Allan, there comes, now and again, as toil continues unabated and "Michael Strogoff" becomes by gradual stages an RKO-Radio attraction, the call of the sandwich, respite and camera man. (Right.)

GIFTS, TOO. Employees of the Fox theatres in Denver are seen attending the annual holiday party, where bonuses and gifts were distributed and a good time had by all. (Below.)

AMBUSHED. Off to the left there, somewhere, is Fred Astaire, rehearsing dance steps for his next RKO-Radio film, "Stepping Toes," and here, shooting him in the act, is the co-star of the same, Ginger Rogers. There may be and probably is a turn-about aspect to this sort of thing, which seems only fair.

APPOINTED SCREEN CENSOR. Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer, widow of the late United States Attorney General of President Wilson's cabinet, has been appointed to the Pennsylvania board of motion picture censors by Governor George H. Earle. Others seen at the swearing-in ceremonies are Mrs. Earle, Edward W. Prendergast, J. Twing Brooks, Robert L. Myers, Jr., George B. Prindible, James J. McDevitt, Arthur H. Howe, Jr., David L. Lawrence and Governor Earle.

ON TO MALAYSIA. Edgar Rice Burroughs, author of the Tarzan stories and board-chairman of Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures, Inc., is shown with William J. Richards, president of the California Zoological Society, signing the agreement of sponsorship under which "Asia Roars" is to be produced by the Elliott-Burroughs-Tarzan Expedition to the Malay Peninsula. Clyde E. Elliott, director-producer of the picture, is an interested onlooker, at left. Mr. Richards is at the right.

LITTLE BROADCAST. George Burns and Gracie Allen, volubly participant currently in Paramount's "The Big Broadcast of 1937," were greeted by reporters on their recent arrival in New York and everybody talked at once, about everything, inclusive of Gracie's brother and other male relatives, of whom, Gracie's life being the open book she insists, profitably, on making it, everybody seemed to know about as much and as little as everybody else.

HOMEWARD BOUND. Having concluded their work on location in the Canadian Rockies, where they operated out of Revelstoke, the cast and production personnel of the Gaumont-British production, "The Great Barrier," returned aboard the "Empress of Britain" to the studios at Shepherd's Bush. Richard Arlen is to be seen in the principal male characterization.

(* Exhibitors listing Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers divided in reporting them as a team and as individuals, the majority, however, as a team.)

THE motion picture public is loyal to its favorite star, but when a new player wins its fancy it is quick to express approbation. This seeming anomaly is evidenced in the 1936 poll of the Money Making Stars, MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S annual canvass of the American cinema ticket window.

Shirley Jane Temple at seven and one-half years of age retains the cherished crown as THE Money Making Star, the honor which the public paid her last year with greater attendance than for any other one player. Even the percentage of her triumph is practically at the same figure as in 1935, while the margin between her vote and that of her nearest competitor was wider than before, representing a greater dispersion of public allegiance to players.

Second only to the fact of the choice of little Miss Temple for the second time as the leader of them all is the outstanding rise of three players to positions among the ten leading Money Makers of the year—Robert Taylor, Jeanette MacDonald and Gary Cooper.

Robert Taylor, who appeared in at least five features in 1934 and almost double that number in 1935, was far from the select circle of the box office in last year's recording. In fact his name appeared in 83d place. This year he is in fourth rank. Taylor had started to follow in his doctor-father's footsteps and planned his course at Pomona College accordingly, before he turned to acting. And it was in the role of a doctor, in "Magnificent Obsession," a 1936 release, that he became a foremost diagnostician of public favor.

Jeanette MacDonald's golden singing voice and her beauty had been known to stage and screen alike for a number of years. It was through her sister, then playing in musical shows, that Miss MacDonald obtained her first opportunity on the stage, in the chorus of a Ned Wayburn show at the Capitol theatre on Broadway. Followed a rise to the top flight in musical comedy on the legitimate. "The Love Parade" was her introduction to the screen, with Ernst Lubitsch as the "discoverer." "The Vagabond King" was one of half a dozen screen appearances in 1930, with a succession in following years. Then in 1935 came "Naughty Marietta" and this year "Rose Marie" and "San Francisco," a triumvirate in which her screen acting coupled with her other attributes to bring her up among the ten Money Making leaders. Thirty-fifth in last year's poll, Miss MacDonald is in ninth place in 1936.

Somewhat similar is the rise of Gary Cooper. Thirty-one was the ranking given him in the exhibitors' accounting for 1935; tenth place is his this year, supplanting James Cagney. Born in Helena, Mont., but educated at Dunstable school in England as well as at Helena and at Grinnell, Iowa, Cooper played in theatricals at college but came to the screen by the long route, serving an apprenticeship as an extra for a year before he won a part in a two-reeler for Hans Tissler, independent. Eileen Sedgwick was his first leading woman. Many have been his pictures, leading up to "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," and others, last year, "Desire" and "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" of early 1936, and, more recently, "The General Died at Dawn."

It is the box office itself which tells the story of the money makers, not the personal preferences of exhibitors. From the account books themselves the showmen have drawn their conclusions as to the relative positions of players in the esteem of the public, as that public has expressed itself in the one most effective method at its command, money down at the cashier's counter. Exhibitors were asked simply this: "Please list in order the ten players whose pictures drew the greatest number of patrons to your theatre."

Thus MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in its surveys year after year, has made them unique in the canvasses of player popularity. The theatre bank book does the talking, hands down the decision.

Again the feminine players have retained their hold upon first place among the Money Making stars. The late Marie Dressler was the winner of the first poll, in 1932, and repeated that triumph in the following year. Will Rogers was the first male star, and the only one to date, to head the procession, receiving the largest number of votes in 1934. With the accession of Shirley Temple last year, Rogers still stood high, in second place. Then came the air tragedy of August 15, 1935, but the many votes accorded him this year reflect the fact that his homely philosophy of the screen lives after him.

While the men players have a less enviable record than the feminine stars in the rank of THE Money Maker, they have held their own in numbers among the ten leading positions. Six male players are so honored by the box offices of America, compared with seven last year.

Actually there are eleven stars in the ten leading places, as there were in 1935. This situation is brought about by the team draw of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. For the most part exhibitors listed these dancing and singing stars as a team, but there were many instances in which they were voted separately. Thus in each case of mention as a team one-half a vote was added to each player's count as an individual, a full vote being given in the case of single placement.

The team of Astaire and Rogers has maintained a position identical with 1935, taking into consideration the passing of

THE memory of Will Rogers is still dear to the American motion picture exhibitor and public, the Money Makers poll shows. Despite the passing of the comedian, a number of exhibitors felt that they would be remiss in their duty as showmen if they failed to mention him in recognition of what he had done for their theatres.

It was a box office tribute, too. The uniformly high receipts which have followed the showing of reissues of Rogers pictures are reflected in the returned questionnaires. Likewise, in reports to "What the Picture Did for Me," even of the last few months, a familiar phrase has been this: "Will Rogers still is the Biggest Money Maker at my theatre."

Will Rogers was THE Money Maker in the records of the exhibitors two years ago. The final round-up of the ballots of the showmen last year showed him runner-up to Shirley Temple.

GARY COOPER

FILM AND OPERA COMBINED

THE production of Leoncavallo's "I Pagliacci" as a screen play is seen in London as a rather considerable artistic and commercial experiment on the part of its director, Karl Grune, and its sponsor, Max Schach, who is issuing it as a Trafalgar release through United Artists. Its obvious description is film opera, but to call the picture that is the quickest way to excite the ire of Director Grune, a Reinhardt graduate who, since he made his first big hit with "The Street," has always had both a clear aim and a definite method in his films, governed by the wide range of subject matter which has led to "Jealousy" and "The Edge of the World."

First article in Grune's belief as a studio craftsman is that subject matter governs screen form, but that all films, no matter what their subject matter, must remain films. Therefore, with the musical value of Leoncavallo's work as his greatest asset, emphasized by the engagement of Richard Tauber to place on the screen one of the greatest of tenor's parts, he had a considerable problem on hand.

Dramatically, "Pagliacci," telling a story of primitive passions, through effective incident and against a circus background, looks like ready-made film fare, but just here, according to Mr. Grune, lay the danger. To follow, to transcribe, Leoncavallo would have been fatally easy, producing a film opera which would have been just a print of the stage production. To "adapt" him offered dangers of its own, not least of them the danger that critics might ask why a story intrinsically dramatic, effectively presented, had not been left alone.

Mr. Grune found his clue in the opera itself. "Pagliacci" is essentially a story in two parts; there is the real life story of Canio and his troupe and there is the drama of jealousy played on the stage. "Leoncavallo told both parts of the story as opera," Mr. Grune says. "Writing opera, he had to do so. Making a film, I see no such necessity. The first, the real-life part of my production, is film. There is just this difference; in the usual film adaptation of opera the songs are just opportunities for the artists to sing. In 'Pagliacci' they are essential to the action; it would not be comprehensible without them. To that extent I have followed the principles of opera-dramaturgy even in the film half of the action.

"The climax of the film is an exact reproduction of Leoncavallo's climax, with one change. His audience is on the stage; mine is in the cinema, and the stage opera is played direct to this audience.

"My essential aim has been to leave the characters of the players and the character of the action as Leoncavallo wrote them, but, for the purpose of presentation to mixed cinema audiences, to make the characters in the real-life scenes act according to real life instead of according to opera; to talk as well as to sing."

EXHIBITORS NAME BIGGEST WESTERN DRAWS

BUCK JONES is THE Money Making Western Star of 1936, according to the box-office reports of American exhibitors. George O'Brien, with a percentage very close indeed to that of the leader, was runner-up.

Thirty-four players in Westerns received votes from the showmen playing their product. There were also scattered indications of exhibitor uncertainty as to latitude of definition of the word Western in motion pictures. Several applied the term to all productions made out-of-doors, as evidenced by the inclusion of the names of players who do not strictly belong within the category of Western stars.

The question asked the showmen was identical, within the prescribed field, with that presented in the general poll of relative standings of players as shown by the theatres' receipts. The question was: "Name in order the ten players in Westerns whose pictures drew the largest attendance to your theatre."

Buck Jones is a name long familiar to the motion picture public. He was born Charles Jones, at Vincennes, Indiana, on December 4, 1889, and received his education in Indianapolis. To mention "Buck Jones" is to say "Westerns."

So, too, with George O'Brien, though his long career in motion pictures includes a large number of productions not in the field of Westerns. O'Brien, of practically the same age as Buck Jones, was born in San Francisco April 19, 1900, and was educated at Polytechnic high school there and at Santa Clara College. O'Brien studied medicine and was in the U. S. Navy before he turned to motion pictures, where he was an assistant cameraman, stunt man and double before he became an actor in his own right. One of his more recent roles was as Daniel Boone in the production of that title.

An outstanding development in the Western field has been the rapid rise of Gene Autry, the singing cowboy, to third position among Western stars. Born at Tioga, Texas, September 29, 1907, he worked on his father's ranch until he finished school, then went on the payroll of the San Francisco Railway in Oklahoma. In 1928 he entered the radio field, also recording for the Victor Company. After four years on the air waves he started in motion pictures in 1934. He writes songs for his productions.

Elsewhere on this page are the results of the American poll of the Western Money Making Stars of 1936, with comparative placing and the percentages.

The same procedure as in the general poll was followed in determining the Money Makers among Western players. Mention for first place was credited with ten points, second place with nine points and so on down to one point for a ballot for tenth place.

New Faces Among Ten Leaders In All-Star Poll of Money Makers

Will Rogers. The same is true of Clark Gable, whom the exhibitors have named in second place, preceding Astaire and Miss Rogers. This team provided one of the highlights of last year's balloting. Astaire's popularity on the screen, duplicating his stage success as a dancer, had its beginning with the release on November 24, 1933, of "Dancing Lady," in which he danced with Joan Crawford. Released a month later, on December 29th, was his first team picture with Ginger Rogers, "Flying Down to Rio."

Several others held to First Ten rankings which had been achieved the year earlier. Indeed, Clark Gable had second ranking two years ago, before the advent of Shirley Temple moved him to third place last year, just as the passing of Rogers returned Gable to second place for 1936. Joe E. Brown moved forward from ninth to fifth, Dick Powell from seventh to sixth. Joan Crawford, seventh this year, was in fifth position in 1935.

Notable, too, is the advancement of Jane Withers, to head the Fifteen Honor Stars following the ten leaders. Thus a child star heads the second bracket of players just as Shirley Temple leads the first ten. Miss Withers was 24th of the group receiving Honorable Mention last year. At ten years of age half of her lifetime has been spent in acting roles.

This year's poll represents all classes of theatres. Whereas in 1935 the survey was addressed only to independent exhibitors, this year the questionnaires went to exhibitors and managers of all types of motion picture presentation.

Determination of final standings was upon a percentage system which gave full credit to the relative standings as the exhibitor accorded them in the light of theatre receipts. Last year so many were the exhibitors who specified that they were naming ten leaders but not differentiating as to their relative drawing power that the percentages were based upon the total number of mentions. This year the showmen presented the stars in comparative standings, only rarely specifying a general grouping.

Therefore the percentages were determined on a basis of ten points for a mention for first place, nine points for second rank mention and finally one point for a ballot cast for tenth position.

No sharp lines may be drawn as to public preferences of types of product from the nature of the pictures represented by the Money Making Stars. Comedy, romance and drama all hold high place. indicated is an increasing patronage interest in singing and dancing on the screen.

Jack Benny Top Radio Personality by "Fame" Poll

Jack Benny is the supreme radio personality of the year, according to Fame—The Box Office Check-Up, issued this week by Quigley Publications.

The Fame poll of radio editors of more than 400 newspapers in the United States and Canada, conducted by Motion Picture Daily, treats of radio entertainment under thirteen divisional headings. Mr. Benny's command of the field is such as to have won him leadership not only among the comedians but also as the open champion, a division in which radio editors were invited to name, without respect to type, function or other qualification, the air attraction considered by them to be more popular than any other. His progam also topped the comedy program classification.

Leaders in the 10 classifications not dominated by Mr. Benny are: Bing Crosby, film player; Nelson Eddy, male vocalist; Jessica Dragonette, feminine vocalist; Burns and Allen, comedy team; General Motors Concerts, musical program; Lux Radio Theatre, drama progam; Andre Kostelanetz, radio band; Don Wilson, announcer; Boake Carter, commentator; and, again, Lux Radio Theatre, film program.

Paramount Stock Is Listed by Atlas

Atlas Corporation is the beneficial owner of 1,516,483 shares of Paramount first preferred stock, according to a statement filed with the New York Stock Exchange Tuesday. In its report, however, the investment company, which is also heavily interested in RKO, disclaims responsibility for accuracy and completeness of the holdings as indicated.

The Paramount report, dated Oct. 3, 1936, lists Allied Owners Corporation as owner of 25,000 shares of the first preferred. The shares were issued to Allied as part of the settlement arrangements for a $5,000,000 claim filed against Paramount in its reorganization proceedings which originated with theatre building and leasing deals made with Paramount.

John D. Hertz with Lehman Brothers, of which he is a partner, are listed as owners of 8,000 shares of second preferred and 600 shares of common. Maurice Newton with Hallgarten and Company, of which he is a partner, are listed as owners of 5,000 shares of second preferred and 5,000 shares of common.

The report disclosed that Adolph Zukor received a salary of $91,645 during 1935 and that John E. Otterson received $84,000 as president of Paramount for the period from June 17, 1935, to Jan. 1, 1936. S. A. Lynch, who served as chairman of the Paramount advisory committee during the reorganization of the company, received a salary of $79,500 for the full year 1935.

Artiness In Criticism

AN added peril, intensifying the natural hazards of motion picture production, are the pieces which a number of bright young men and women are writing about motion pictures for the newspapers. These pieces are apparently represented to be criticisms of motion pictures although in point of fact they fulfill mainly the function of supplying to the writers a stage for a performance of verbal acrobatics. Frequently there is even little evidence that the pieces are concerned with an expertly and expensively produced attraction intended for the entertainment of a mass audience.

Usually they are frolicsome items which may afford a pleasurable sensation to the writers and may indeed be entertaining to some readers, provided that these latter are content to receive a miscellaneous collection of witticisms in place of information and guidance about motion pictures. However, as an indication to the motion picture producer as to what the public wants, or as an indication of public reaction to what it has received, they are worthless. In addition, if considered as criticisms they are capable of destroying any sound judgments as to popular entertainment tastes which a producer may presently possess.

IN the natural order the press ought to be an ally of the motion picture producer. There are indeed newspaper writers who can be relied upon for constructive criticism and observation but there are also an increasingly large number of others who have developed an arty and so-called sophisticated pose which encourages them to sneer and scoff at anything at the level of the ordinary person —the person, incidentally, for whom motion pictures primarily are made. These writers are enemies of the screen because if their attitude should be allowed to influence the character of motion pictures the results in a narrowed appeal and in a restricted following would be disastrous.

An unfailing manifestation of the artiness of these writers is the hysterical acclaim with which they greet the appearance of decidedly second-rate foreign productions. One stands bewildered before some of these subjects which are hailed as masterpieces—subjects which in many respects are beneath the standards of Hollywood's quickie producers.

A while back cinema crudities from Moscow plunged these ebullient writers into a foam and froth of enthusiasm. Recently a German-French film, that if found on his schedule by a major company sales manager would drive him quickly to desperation, has received the accolade. In fact the cinema critic of The New York Times in a way and manner most mysterious to contemplate hails this subject as the greatest film of the year—a conclusion which among sensible people ought to provoke not argument but rather only wonderment at the inscrutable processes of artiness.

Strangely enough this same film was seized upon by that fatuous institution, the National Board of Review, as an opportunity for the board to render to the American industry its crowning feat of disservice. The board's selection of this film as one worthy of especial recommendation adds an excess to what already has been amply proved, that the board as an interpreter of American tastes and as an influence for the moral and artistic improvement of the motion picture is a dismal failure.

The organized industry in the United States, through whose sufferance the board exists, would show good judgment in giving practical effect to the conclusion which has long and wisely obtained; namely, that the board has long since ceased to be of any service, moral or practical, and that in so far as the industry is concerned it ought to be allowed to fold its tent and silently steal away.

ATTENDANCE, PRICES, GROSSES INCREASED

R. H. Cochrane and Financial Writer Point to Higher Receipts and Improved Product

An average weekly theatre attendance increase of 9,000,000, a trend toward higher admissions, and marked improvement in the quality of pictures are factors cited as responsible for the impressive grosses recorded by the motion picture industry in 1936 and are the basis for the prediction that 1937 holds the brightest prospects in the industry's history.

These factors and the solid facts of an increase of $250,000,000 in gross receipts and unprecedented gains in earnings of companies are outstanding in a statement by R. H. Cochrane, president of Universal, and in a year-end survey of motion picture finances by Sidney B. Self in the Wall Street Journal.

"The increase in the industry's gross receipts to the largest total in five years not only reflected the nationwide gains in employment and payrolls but a notable increase in the quality of motion pictures turned out during the past year," Mr. Cochrane said.

With the average weekly attendance having gained 9,000,000 over the 1935 average of 72,000,000, according to Mr. Cochrane's estimates, the peak levels prevailing prior to the depression have about been regained, he said. While he estimated the average attendance gain for the year at 12½ per cent over 1935, the Universal executive pointed out that attendance at the close of 1936 was running 15 per cent ahead of the corresponding period of the previous year and represented a recovery of 50 per cent from the depression low of approximately 54,000,000 in 1933.

Holiday Spurt Cited

This sharp increase at the end of the year was taken by Mr. Self as an indication of the continued improvement which may be expected in the winter quarter statements of the companies. The industry closed the year with the best holiday season it had had in years, he pointed out, with box office receipts during the Christmas period showing increases of from 10 to 25 per cent over the corresponding weeks in 1935.

"With the large number of major pictures scheduled for appearance in the first two months of 1937 the first quarter of the new year should bring the largest profits the film companies have had since 1930," the financial writer said.

Construction Plans

The survey further pointed out that the most important factor for the industry in 1936 was the increased theatre attendance which first made itself felt last summer. Even a small increase in attendance is reflected in major gains in earnings reports, Mr. Self pointed out, because once theatre income passes the point at which operating expenses and overhead are covered, 70 per cent or more of the additional gross goes directly into net.

Plans for theatre construction by independent exhibitors and the scheduled expansion of production facilities, including new sound stages, by nearly all the large companies were listed in the survey as indications that the industry now believes itself firmly on the upgrade.

"The moving picture industry starts 1937 with the best combination of financial and Hollywood management that it has probably ever had," Mr. Self continued. "All of the leading companies now have smoothly functioning production management supervised by experienced financial men seemingly working together without the friction that has occurred in the past between these two divisions of the business."

Strongly indicative of the improved business in theatres during 1936 were reports of the earnings of equipment companies which were published this week. The National Theatre Supply Company indicated that the projector business increased by 15 per cent in 1936. Electrical Research Products, Inc., reported a gain in the installation of Western Electric sound equipment of nearly 100 per cent in 1936 over 1935.

GB Plans to Open Exchange System

In view of expansion contemplated by the company Gaumont British will open its own exchanges in key cities of the United States in the near future, it was reported this week.

This season's GB schedule provides for 24 pictures, an increase of eight over last year. Included in the 24 are five from British International Pictures, John Maxwell's company, five from Herbert Wilcox and one from Capital.

Officials of 20th Century-Fox, through whose exchanges GB has been physically distributing its product, have announced that insufficient vault space makes it impossible for the company to handle other than GB product. Sidney R. Kent is said to have advised Arthur Lee, vice-president of American GB company, of this. Mr. Lee, in Miami this week, said:

"I have not had any notice from Mr. Kent as yet or the opportunity of seeing him, but if 20th Century-Fox will not physically distribute what we have to exhibit, we will then open our own offices right away. It is only a matter of time before we would have to do this anyway, due to our growing business."

It was indicated that the new offices would be opened one at a time.

Poli Firms Are Dissolved

Final certificates of dissolution have been filed for S. Z. Poli Theatre Company and S. Z. Poli Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., both of New Haven, formerly operating the Poli New England Theatres.

Taxes Highlight Local Measures

Tax measures directly affecting motion picture exhibitors are looming in Savannah, Kansas City, Omaha and Springfield, Mass. this week as anti-Sunday show measures attracted the attention of city councils in Boston, Montgomery, Ala., Beatrice, Nebr. In Minneapolis a new and less drastic ordinance regulating theatre construction was presented to the city council.

A proposed tax ordinance which would levy a tax of 10 per cent on gross incomes of amusement places for relief work was presented to the Savannah city council this week and approved by the committee for the whole as a section of the 1937 tax ordinance, which is to be adopted later.

Governor-elect Lloyd C. Stark in Kansas City will recommend doubling Missouri's present one per cent sales tax in his legislative recommendations to the state legislature on January 11, it was revealed this week. The present one per cent tax will yield $12,800,000, or more than $2,000,000 in excess of what was anticipated at the beginning of the year.

Charles E. Williams, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska, in Omaha, has mailed letters to 100 members asking them to meet to discuss plans to combat tax legislation unfavorable to them which is expected to arise in the state legislature when it convenes shortly.

A 10 per cent tax on tickets for theatres and other entertainments conducted by licensed organizations is called for under the terms of a bill filed with the clerk of the House of Representatives in Boston, Mass., by Representative Albert Rubin. Other bills in the house provide for the licensing of architects and for the publishing of names of companies discriminating against persons over 24 years old in hiring employes.

A bill introduced into the House of Representatives at Montgomery, Ala., by Representative Chichester of Birmingham, legalizing Sunday shows in sections of Jefferson County (Birmingham) has been passed by the members. The city of Birmingham has Sunday shows but a number of little towns in the country do not.

The Sunday show law in Beatrice, Nebr., is again being attacked, even though several referendums have failed to remove it from the statutes, following the recent charity program sponsored by the American Legion.

Following weeks of disputes among members of the city council committee in Minneapolis on ordinances and legislation, a revised and less drastic ordinance governing theatre construction won the unanimous approval of the committee this week. The new ordinance provides for a distance of only 300 feet from church or schools for new theatres.

"Robber Symphony" Rights Sold

Al Friedlander, president of Fortune Film Corporation has acquired the rights of "The Robber Symphony" for all of North and South America. Openings are scheduled for Toronto, Quebec, Montreal, Mexico City, Havana, Buenos Aires, Rio de Janeiro and other cities.

INDUSTRY ITSELF DECLARED SOURCE OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE MOVES

Assistant Attorney General, Resigning, Says Complaints Have Come from Industry; Suggests Corps of Investigators

The industry's attention to the controversial questions of trade practices was turned this week to a statement by Assistant Attorney General John Dickinson, resigning from the Department of Justice, that practically all activities of his department against the motion picture industry on the matter of trade practices have been actuated by complaints from within the industry itself. At the same time Loew's, Inc., became the fourth distributor to accept, in part, the ten-point trade practice program of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and the National Council for Industrial Progress, in Washington, was reported preparing for the first draft of a bill to establish fair trade practices for all industries.

Reviewing the activities of the anti-trust bureau in the annual report submitted to Congress January 6th by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, Mr. Dickinson said that the practical dependence of the department on "tips" in the form of private complaints had led to many difficulties. To remedy this situation he recommended legislation authorizing the attorney general to unleash the G-men of the Federal Bureau of Investigation for fishing expeditions in any quarter where violations are suspected.

The assistant attorney general, retiring after two years as head of the anti-trust division, told Congress that this unsatisfactory dependence on private complaints in order to enforce the law is further involved by the not infrequent use of the department as a cat's-paw by parties who file complaints, later compromise their differences with those against whom they proceeded, and then refuse to cooperate further with the government.

New Unit Recommended

In passing, Mr. Dickinson made reference to the courts whose decisions, he said, have placed the stamp of legality "on many things popularly believed to constitute violations,"

"For all these reasons," he said, "it seems imperative that the anti-trust division should be equipped with independent facilities for instituting investigations in the public interest and thus be relieved of its almost complete dependence on interested private initiative.

Under the legislation proposed by Mr. Dickinson, the division would keep in constant touch with activities in industry and business and could institute proceedings immediately against any group or organization whose operations indicated a possibility of law violation.

In the report the only motion picture cases of the past year reviewed were those arising out of the St. Louis indictments, which were summarized as follows:

The original case was based on an indictment returned Jan. 11, 1935, in the federal district Court for the Eastern district of Missouri, against 10 motion picture corporations and six of their officials, charging a combination for the purpose of preventing Fancho & Marco, exhibitors, from procuring product for exhibition in three of their houses. The case was tried and a verdict of acquittal was returned by the jury on Nov. 11, 1935.

COURTS REVIEWING TRADE PRACTICES

Two trade practice suits are now under judicial consideration, one in a federal and one in a state court. The Hoblitzelle theatre interests and eight distributor defendants in the Government anti-trust action brought in Dallas last month have until January 24th to file answers to the complaint which is based on contracts between the distributors and the circuits under which subsequent run houses are not permitted to double feature certain pictures or charge unreasonably low admissions.

RKO Distributing Corporation is attacking the Ohio law barring preferred playing time clauses, in a federal district court in that state. The Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio are defending the constitutionality of the law. Both sides have been given until January 30th to file further briefs.

On Aug. 6, 1935, a new petition had been filed in the same court, charging the defendants with illegal restraint of interstate commerce by a combination to prevent the supply of product to two St. Louis houses. After the case had been on trial for 20 days, the court granted the Government's motion for leave to withdraw its petition without prejudice to its right to file a new petition charging the same conspiracy. A decree to that effect was rendered Jan. 29, 1936, and was appealed by the defendants to the supreme court, which affirmed it on May 25th.

Under the dismissal decree, a petition was filed in the district court for the southern district of New York on February 25, 1936, naming 10 corporations and 30 individuals charged with a combination, conspiracy and attempted monopoly in restraint of interstate trade and commerce. On April 30th, an order dismissing the case was entered, based on a stipulation in which the defendants agreed to enter into contracts to provide pictures for the theatres whose supply of product was alleged to have been restrained by their refusal to make contracts.

Congress To Get Bills

Senator Black of Alabama has a bill for a 30-hour week in all industries ready for introduction in the upper house, and Representative Ellenbogen of Pennsylvania will reintroduce his measure providing an NRA for the textile industry, to be followed by similar legislation for other industries if his initial effort is successful.

Apparently abandoning all thoughts of a Constitutional Amendment to permit the Government to deal with labor and social problems, President Roosevelt on Wednesday, in his annual message to Congress, reiterated his belief in the principles of NRA and urged Supreme Court support of the New Deal program.

Loew's Is Fourth Company to Accept Part of MPTOA Trade Practice Program; Patman Measure To Be Revised

Complete revision of the Patman bill, which would prohibit producers from engaging in retail distribution, will be undertaken before it is introduced into the House of Representatives.

Instead of a flat prohibition against retail distribution by producers, it is expected the bill will vest in the Federal Trade Commission authority to compel the abandonment of retail outlets by producers whose distribution activities tend to create unfair competition, lead to monopoly or "injure the business of a customer who is a retailer."

Industry Coordinator George L. Berry was to meet on Wednesday with his correlating committee to prepare drafts of a bill covering the recommendations made last month at the meeting of the Council for Industrial Progress.

Loew's Accepts Program

Loew's, Inc., distributing subsidiary of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has agreed to grant unrestricted 10 per cent cancellation privileges, to offer a short form of contract and to cooperate in establishment of local concilation boards under its acceptance of the MPTOA trade practice program. The company's position was explained in a letter to Edward Kuykendall, head of the exhibitor organization, from Al Lichtman, Loew's vice-president.

The distributor declined to make any concessions on score charges and characterized the MPTOA request on this point as, "in effect, a request to lower film rentals."

Mr. Lichtman's letter follows:

"1—Loew's commits itself to the proposition that it will grant an unrestricted ten per cent cancellation on all contracts whenever the exhibitor leases all the product that is offered to him for exhibition.

"2—We are in thorough sympathy with your request for the establishment of local conciliation boards and a central appeal board in New York City. The principle is an excellent one and its promotion shall receive our hearty support.

"3—We are also opposed to unreasonable clearance. No general statement, however, can be applicable to all cases. The question of what is reasonable clearance depends upon the facts in the individual case and can only be determined with those facts before us.

"4—We are in complete harmony with your viewpoint on the question of over-buying and will gladly lend our aid in its elimination. This is one of the questions in respect to which the conciliation boards could render most effective service.

"5—We will give our utmost cooperation in the elimination of unfair competition between theatres. Here again the conciliation boards can be most helpful.

"6—Our position in regard to non-theatrical exhibitions is, I am sure, very well known to you and in thorough accord with your desires.

"7—We favor the idea of a short form contract; in fact, our legal department is now endeavoring to revise our contracts so that we may achieve this purpose.

"8—In setting film rental in license agree-

656 Radio Stations Now Operating on Crowded Channels

With more radio broadcasting stations licensed than at any time since 1928, the number of broadcasters bids fair in the near future to exceed even the 681 that were operating during the "period of chaos" in 1927 which led to the creation of the original radio commission, it is indicated by the annual report of the Federal Communications Commission, submitted to Congress in Washington Tuesday.

At the close of the fiscal year on June 30, last, the report disclosed there were 656 stations licensed, an increase of 33 over the corresponding date in 1935 and the largest number since 1928, when there were 677.

A. J. Balaban with a Chicago Combine Will Enter F&M

A. J. Balaban, a founder of the B. and K. theatre circuit in Chicago with Sam Katz, will return to the exhibition field of motion pictures with Jules Rubens, head of Great States theatres, as partners of all Fanchon and Marco interests in St. Louis, it was reported Wednesday.

Negotiations are reported underway for Mr. Balaban and Mr. Rubens to acquire a substantial interest in F and M. Arthur Greene, who is interested financially in several Chicago circuits and recently objected to the court sale of the St. Louis Amusement Company to the first mortgage bondholders, will also be a party. Mr. Greene, Mr. Rubens, I. B. Perlman and Sam Myers, brother-in-law of the Balabans, are said to have conferred in St. Louis last week with Harry C. Arthur, operating head of F. and M., on the possibility of a deal. Mr. Myers is believed to have represented A. J. Balaban.

Mr. Balaban recently organized Balaban Theatres Company at Dover, Del. He is head of the company. Mr. Greene, Mr. Perlman and Jack Bartman of Chicago also are interested.

On November 29, last, F. and M. took over the operation of the St. Louis Amusement Company on a 10-year management contract with the bondholders. In addition, the company operates the Ambassador, St. Louis, Missouri Fox and Orpheum and Shubert-Rialto and the Balaban-Rubens deal would include all of these houses and possibly the three neighborhood ones in which F. and M. is interested with Harry Greenman.

C. L. Hertzman Dead; Theatrical Manager

Charles L. Hertzman, theatrical manager and at one time a scenario editor with Universal Pictures in Hollywood, died at Atlantic City, N. J., at the age of 63.

Mr. Hertzman had been in the theatrical business more than 25 years in Detroit, New York and Cleveland. For eight years he was general manager for the late Harry H. Frazee, Broadway producer. From 1926 to 1932 he was general manager for the firm of Schwab and Mandel, for which he directed such shows as "The Desert Song," "Good News," and "Follow Thru." He was later connected with Max Gordon and A. C. Blumenthal.

ments the exhibitor and the salesman have invariably taken into consideration the provision for score charges. Consquently, your request for the elimination of score charges is in effect a request to lower film rentals. We do not think that this request could consistently be made since it has always been and must be a question of negotiation between the individual exhibitor and the sales department what the individual exhibitor shall pay for his film license.

"9—The request for the elimination of preferred playing time for percentage pictures is not now well grounded. With the adoption of the strict production code, all pictures are appropriate for exhibition on any day, and surely quality pictures are entitled to preferred play dates.

"10—It has been our desire to provide for balanced programs, realizing that a substantial percentage of the theatres requires short subjects. We are certain that you desire that short subjects shall be provided so that the remaining theatres shall not be compelled to go to double features in order to provide an evening's program. The short subjects, of course, will have to be supported if produced. We have adjusted our short reel product to meet not only the requirements of the theatres using only single features but of those using double features as well."

Comerford Managers Launch 10-Week Drive

One hundred home office executives and managers of the Comerford circuit were called in for a meeting Tuesday at the Hotel Casey, Scranton, Pa., to learn details of the 10-week "Winter Movie Carnival," starting Sunday.

Under the supervision of John Nolan, two sessions were held. Speakers at the forenoon meeting, besides Mr. Nolan, were A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, who discussed advertising and exploitation, and Harry Spiegel, Fred Perry, Ed Simonis and John Galvin.

Afternoon speakers on various departmental operations were John Nolan, William E. Schmidt, John Roberts, J. J. O'Leary and other executives. Distribution was made of the first issue of "The Way Up," circuit house organ, to be published weekly by the drive committee and edited by Ernie Schmidt and Joe Elicker.

Mr. Nolan expressed the regrets of Vice-president Frank C. Walker for his absence necessitated by a trip to the Coast.

Arrangements were made for the circulation of Quigley Award campaigns to Comerford circuit key point.

TEXAS AND NEW YORK COURTS CLASH IN CHANCE GAME RULINGS

New York State Court of Appeals Divides 4 to 3 in Holding Games Are Within the Law

Confusion regarding the legal status of Bank Night and other chance games was heightened this week by a decision of the New York State court of appeals which placed theatre chance games within the law. In Chicago, Balaban & Katz theatres are reinstating Bank Night following the granting of an injunction which prevents police from interfering with their operation. Conflicting with the New York decision, the Texas supreme court ruled that Bank Night is unconstitutional because "It is a gift enterprise involving the lottery principle."

The New York court was divided 4 to 3 on the ruling, which was made without opinion. It upheld the legality of the various giveaways which are conducted in hundreds of theatres throughout the state. The case was decided on the basis of a system of awards in vogue in Rochester, where theatre patrons register and their names are drawn in the theatre on a specified night.

The Rochester case was carried to the highest state court by Daniel J. O'Mara, district attorney of Monroe County, after the county court had reversed the conviction of Samuel Shafer, manager of a Rochester neighborhood theatre, on charges of unlawfully offering property to persons whose names were drawn in a lottery. The appeal was argued by Jacob Ark for Mr. Shafer, and Harry L. Rosenthal, assistant district attorney, for the prosecution.

Mr. Ark contended that "chances" for the prizes were not sold and that all persons, whether or not they attended the theatre, could register in a book in the theatre lobby, from which the names of the winners were drawn.

Mr. Rosenthal branded the games as "pernicious gambling." He contended that the lottery law was flexible enough in its application to enable law enforcement officials to prosecute "the innumerable variations devised by those attempting to avoid the prohibition against the most pernicious and far-reaching of all forms of gambling."

The prize award in the case appealed was $175. It was made on the night of June 12, 1936. The county court, in reversing the conviction, found that the person who received the award had not paid for admission.

Resumed in Chicago

The injunction granted to the Iris theatre last week by Judge Walter Stanton of the Superior Court, restraining the police from stopping Bank Night in that theatre, brought about the resumption of the game in B&K, Warner and other theatres. The Essaness circuit was the only group to refrain from starting the game again after police arrested 16 managers two weeks ago and prohibited the game.

B&K and 33 additional theatres were granted permission Tuesday to file an intervening petition to join the injunction granted the Iris. Judge Niemeyer of the superior court set a hearing on the petition for Thursday after denying Assistant Corporation Counsel William Daly's plea that the petition be denied at once. Mr. Daly charged Bank Night with being contrary to the city ordinance which prohibits theatres from distributing prizes and asserted that the game was a public nuisance and a hazard to the public because of the overcrowding of theatres.

STATE LAW TO BAN BANK NIGHT SOUGHT

Announcement of a bill to be introduced in the Wisconsin legislature defining slot machines and Bank Night as gambling has been made by Assemblyman Martin Franzkowiak. The proposed measure would provide for a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $500 fine.

Assemblyman Franzkowiak said that the regulation of these games must be on a statewide basis rather than through municipal ordinances.

Exhibitors granted permission Tuesday were those previously arrested. Other petitions will be sought when more theatremen are arrested. It is believed by Chicago theatre operators that they can conduct the games on the original Bank Night plan, which they claim is legal, and thus avoid police interference. This plan does not require the purchase of a ticket for participation. Previously all patrons were required to have a ticket to be eligible for prizes.

The Chicago police ban on the games has aroused much controversy. Raymond Knotts, in his column "One Man's Opinion" in the Chicago American, defended chance games in theatres as one of the most innocuous forms of gambling and pointed out that as long as they are popular any laws against them will be ineffectual.

Condemned in Texas

In an opinion written by Chief Justice C. M. Cureton of the Texas supreme court and handed down this week, Bank Night is held to be a violation of public policy and unconstitutional.

"The plan clearly comes within the condemnatory terms of the constitution," the decision said, "because it is a gift enterprise involving the lottery principle."

The case involved an attempted enforcement of an anti-lottery ordinance by the city of Wink against Griffith Amusement Company. The ruling was based on a constitutional provision classing gift enterprises with lotteries.

The state legislature at its last session taxed Bank Night and other chance games 20 per cent of the awards but omitted any reference to their legality.

Balaban & Katz Theatres in Chicago Reinstating Bank Night After Injunction Prevents Police Interference

Results of the decision were not immediately apparent. In Houston it was announced that two Bank Nights each week will continue in seven Interstate circuit houses and two Will Horwitz theatres.

Kansas Case To Be Reheard

The petition of Roland Boynton, attorney for the Fox Kansas Theatre Company, for the privilege of filing an application for rehearing of the Kansas supreme court's decision on Bank Night, has been granted by the state tribunal.

The court in its decision held that Bank Night was in the nature of a lottery because it indisputably had the elements of chance and prizes and that increased admissions resulting from the use of the promotion was sufficient consideration to make up the third element of a lottery.

Only three or four Kansas exhibitors have discontinued Bank Night as a result of the decision, according to R. W. McEwan, Bank Night distributor, pending final settlement of the case. The presumption is that until that time exhibitors may proceed with the promotion. Mr. Beck, however, has announced that he immediately will notify county attorneys to prosecute exhibitors who conduct the games.

Maine Case Dismissed

The United States district court in Maine has dismissed an infringement suit brought against Bank Night by Harry Berman. The plaintiff, a former dry goods dealer who became the Maine Bank Night representative, claimed that a similar cash scheme of his had been infringed and adopted by Bank Night. He has another suit pending for commissions he claims due him from the company.

In Iowa the games have been the subject of conflicting legal opinions from various state and municipal officials. The most recent opinion was from assistant attorney general Walter Maley, who said:

"It is clearly apparent that the scheme in question constitutes a lottery. It remains only to be said that it is equally the duty of the state not only to protect the public welfare against lotteries but to prevent legitimate business from being overrun and destroyed by them. The scheme in question falls under the clear condemnation of the state statute against gambling. It is a scheme calculated to set the particular community in which it is operated wild with speculation. It is a scheme in and of itself which shows it is operated for profit. It is a type of scheme insidious and dangerous and one that, if permitted to operate in theatres, would have a tendency to spread and multiply in all other lines of business and do violence to recognized standards of business ethics. It is a scheme which has neither legal nor moral right to exist and should be speedily suppressed."

Disposal of RKO Claims Confirmed By Federal Court

Federal Judge William Bondy in New York last Thursday confirmed the disallowance or reduction of claims against RKO amounting to $9,637,595 in accordance with the action taken on claims in June, 1935, by Special Master Thomas D. Thacher.

The court's action involved 27 claims which were filed against RKO in its reorganization proceedings for a total of $10,582,250. Of this amount only $954,655 was recommended for allowance to the claimants by Mr. Thacher and confirmed by Judge Bondy. However, 12 of the 27 claims previously either were withdrawn or settled.

The principal claims were those of the Karl Hoblitzelle interests which were allowed for a total of approximately $500,000. The claims were filed originally for a total of $7,424,348 by the Hoblitzelle Investment Company, Hoblitzelle Realty Corporation and Hoblitzelle Corporation. The claims were based on an RKO guaranty on defaulted 25-year leases on three theatres located in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, dating from 1930. The court allowed the claims on rentals due up to September, 1934.

A claim of $2,152,500 filed by Walter Reade's Broadway and 47th Street Corporation on a disavowed lease on the Mayfair in New York was reduced by the court to $337,500. The Hippodrome Building Corporation petitioned the court to set an allowance on a Hippodrome lease claim, but the petition was denied and no allowance was made.

Other claims and their disposition are Fort Worth Properties Corporation, $450,000 asked, $17,595 allowed; Mudd and Mooney, $115,832 asked, disallowed in toto; Criterion Advertising, claim of $4,903, allowed; Proctor Holding Corporation, claim of $50,000 disallowed; Illinois Central Railroad claim of $157 allowed; Cora E. Gregg, claim of $160,000 allowed, and Gordon Burnett, claim of $200,000 disallowed.

Erpi Increasing Equipment Price

A general price increase of 10 per cent in all contracts for Mirrophonic sound equipment will go into effect on February 1st. In announcing the increase C. W. Bunn, general sales manager of Electrical Research Products, Inc., said that it was necessary in order to meet rising costs.

Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York has accepted an invitation to attend the annual Movie Ball of the Independent Theatre Owners of America on January 16th at the Waldorf Astoria hotel.

Perry N. Verkoff Dead

Perry N. Verkoff, character actor and former director, died in Hollywood Tuesday. He was 56. Mr. Verkoff's last appearance on the screen was in a Mae West picture some time ago.

William Goetz Elected 20th Century-Fox Officer

William Goetz, executive assistant to Darryl F. Zanuck, production head of Twentieth Century-Fox, last week was elected a vice-president of the corporation "in appreciation of his work as assistant" to Mr. Zanuck and Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board.

Mr. Goetz, who is one of the youngest studio executives in the industry, has been associated with Mr. Schenck and Mr. Zanuck since the formation of the original Twentieth Century Pictures Corporation and on the merger of that company with Fox he became executive assistant to Mr. Zanuck. Before that he was with Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in an executive capacity and later was with Fox as an associate producer.

Radio Engineers Suggest Changes In Federal Rules

Recommendations to be submitted to the Federal Communications Commission by that body's engineering division include changes in radio regulations which would make possible the creation of a chain of 15 to 25 broadcasting stations operating on a clear channel frequency of 500,000 watts. At present WLW in Cincinnati is the only station in America allowed a power of 500,000 watts and this is on an experimental basis.

The engineering division's report, based on an exhaustive study of radio's technical problems, says that there is no engineering objection to the creation of such high power stations and it recommends that the number of clear channels be reduced from the present 40 to 25 or 30; that the band from 1,500 to 1,600 kilocycles be opened for general broadcasting, and that the rules governing allocation of frequencies be made flexible.

The commission engineers are now of the opinion that by the use of modern engineering knowledge and equipment interference would be prevented. It is because of the fear of such interference that all requests for power increases to 500,000 watts have been turned down except in the case of WLW.

The recommendations for changes are based on the assumption that any program adopted will be evolutionary and entirely voluntary on the part of the industry. That any changes in the broadcast field of this nature would be voluntary was emphasized by the FCC when the study was instituted several months ago.

Sam Fox Organizes Hollywood Songs, Inc.

Sam Fox, head of several music companies, has organized Hollywood Songs, Inc., to publish songs from pictures. Mr. Fox is president and Phil Kornheiser general manager. Several prominent writers in the music world are being lined up for the new organization. Offices are being established in Rockefeller Center, New York.

RKO, Universal Finish Corporate Simplification

Two of the large motion picture companies, Universal and RKO, completed simplification of their corporate structures late last week. Universal concluded the process with filing of papers in Delaware dissolving Universal Pictures Corporation, oldest company in the organization and one of the oldest in the entire industry.

The assets of Universal Pictures Corporation were taken over by Universal Pictures Company, Inc., of which the first-named corporation was a wholly-owned subsidiary. The dissolved company was organized in 1912 as Universal Film Manufacturing Company and its name changed to Universal Pictures Corporation several years later. It was the principal Universal holding company for many years. Five other Universal subsidiaries were dissolved earlier and there is a possibility of one more company being disbanded, except for which Universal's program of corporate simplification is now completed.

RKO's program of corporate simplification also was formally completed with the filing of papers in Delaware merging seven RKO Radio and RKO Pathe subsidiaries with RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. No changes in officers of the latter company are occasioned by the consolidation.

The seven companies merged into the one are RKO Pathe Pictures, Inc.; RKO Pathe Distributing Corporation, RKO Pathe Export Corporation, RKO Pathe Studios Corporation, Ltd.; RKO Distributing Corporation, RKO Studios, Inc. and RKO Export Corporation. Officers of the new company are M. H. Aylesworth, chairman of the board; Leo Spitz, president; Ned E. Depinet, vice-president; W. H. Clark, treasurer, and William Mallard, secretary.

Ross Alexander Dead Of Gunshot Wound

Ross Alexander, 29, screen comedy actor, was found dead with a pistol bullet in his head last Saturday. The body was discovered in a barn behind the actor's ranch home near Hollywood. His wife, Anne Nagel, 21 year old film actress, survives him.

Ross Alexander was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., but lived most of his life in Rochester. His real name was Ross Alexander Smith. After a number of stage appearances he went to Hollywood in 1934. His wife at that time was Aleta Friele, dancer, who was prominent in Jersey City social circles. On the night of December 6th, 1935, she was found shot to death in their home in Hollywood.

At the time of his death Mr. Alexander was under contract to Warner Brothers. His screen appearances included roles in "The Wiser Sex," "Flirtation Walk," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "We're in the Money," and "Shipmates Forever."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Flavours Last

TRADEMARKS, or rather company names, still do after all carry meaning to an important portion of the theatre audience, in the opinion of Leo Peterson, blue-eyed and calmly substantial general manager of the Black Hills Amusement Company, this week on his annual winter excursion to Hollywood.

It will be interesting to Adolph Zukor, now in the midst of his twenty-fifth anniversary, to know that up in the country of the late Wild Bill Hickock, Rapid City and Deadwood, the years of effort that have been put into the slogan, "If It's a Paramount Picture, It's the Best Show in Town," have been burned into the public consciousness.

"And it is so, too," observes Mr. Peterson, "with the other long established concerns—Metro, Fox, Warners, Universal, etc. Each has a meaning to our customers, and it is interesting that the public tends to forget the disappointments it may have had at the box office and to rate the probabilities of any coming attraction by the past performance of entertainment."

Mr. Peterson is an advocate of the policy of playing strictly to the great common people, as the consistent paying patrons. "When I started in the business I thought it would be policy to go after the big shots in every community, but that's wrong. They only come once in a while, and when they do they want to own the house. They are the ones that make kicks and special demands, too."

MR. PETERSON'S organization is the northern neighbor of the Gibraltar circuit, both alike having their booking offices in Denver. The Black Hills concern has ten houses in the Dakota-Nebraska country. Just incidentally, after a preview, he has decided that they won't be looking at "The Plainsman" in Deadwood and that region, because the Black Hills country will not, in his opinion and that of his committee, stand for the screen's somewhat euphemistic, enameled and manicured lily version of "Calamity Jane." The still young tradition of the lady is not as sweetly scented as Hollywood seems to have decided to represent her. "We do not want our people to get started laughing at serious pictures," says Mr. Peterson. "It will do better where they do not know Calamity Jane in such a personal sort of way."

Mr. Peterson and his circuit find MOTION PICTURE HERALD and its services important to their operations and files of the publication are maintained for continual reference to reviews, and advance attentions in the "Cutting Room" pages and the Release Chart. "We keep the HERALD for five years back," he remarked, "and there are stacks of years before that in the basement where once in a while we hunt out something.

"The Better Theatres section gets first attention in my office," he added. "We have to have it to keep house. We are always looking for new and better bits of equipment, and when it comes to building and remodeling I get together a set of clippings of lobbies and other details from Better Theatres, paste them up and take them to my architect in Chicago and tell him, 'I want it to look like this.' "

Camera Clean-Up

THE year-end week witnessed completion of thirteen features and commencement of shooting on six. Product of promise distinguished both divisions.

Completed work was generally distributed; eleven studios accounting for the baker's dozen films finished. Radio finished two. The first, "Michael Strogoff," an adaptation of Jules Verne's famous novel and play, stars the European dramatic artist, Anton Walbrook, in the title role. The supporting cast includes Margot Grahame, Elizabeth Allen, Akim Tamiroff, Fay Bainter, Eric Blore, Paul Guilfoyle, Paul Harvey, Murray Kinnell, Edward Brophy, Frank M. Thomas, Doris Lloyd, Michael Visaroff, Francis McDonald and Oscar Apfel. George Nichols, Jr., directed. Completed also for this company's release is the David Loew production, "When's Your Birthday?" Joe E. Brown is featured with Marian Marsh.

Two pictures likewise were finished by Columbia. Being considered with optimistic expectancy, "When You're in Love," romantic drama with music, will present Grace Moore, Cary Grant, Aline MacMahon, Henry Stephenson, Catherine Doucet, Edgar Kennedy, Gerald Oliver Smith, Barnett Parker, Marcelle Corday, William Pawley, Billy Gilbert, Emma Dunn and George Peace. Harry Lachman and Robert Riskin share direction credit. In "Freedom for Sale," drama, Paul Kelly, Rosalind Keith Thurston Hall, John Spacey, Al Hill, Arthur Loft, Leona Maricle and Leora Thatcher will be seen. C. C. Coleman, Jr., directed.

Conn Studios completed "Diamonds vs. Bullets," drama, in which Frankie Darro, Kane Richmond and June Gale are the principals

MAJOR Pictures brought "Happiness Preferred," comedy romance, in under the wire. Directed by Robert Florey, it features Warren William, Karen Morley, Lewis Stone, Jackie Moran, Christian Rub and Esther Dale.

At MGM "Dangerous Number," comedy drama, finished. Robert Young and Ann Sothern are starred.

Paramount finished "Clarence," a domestic comedy based on a popular Booth Tarkington story and play. The cast is composed of Roscoe Karns, Charlotte Wynters, Johnny Down, Eleanore Whitney, Gene Pallette, Spring Byington and Richard Powell. George Archainbaud directed.

"Top of the Town," new Universal's most pretentious effort to date, was moved to the cutting room. A fantastic musical comedy romance, it features George Murphy and Doris Nolan in the leading roles

For United Artists release Selznick International finished "A Star Is Born." A modern Hollywood comedy, the film was shot in Technicolor. Janet Gaynor is starred with Fredric March. Adolphe Menjou is among those in support.

Direct production activities were ended on "Old Lady Ironsides," Republic, New Year's Eve. The cast includes Alison Skipworth, Polly Moran, Donald Cook, Hope Manning, James Morton, Harry Burns, Luis Alberni, Maxie Rosenbloom, Jackie Searl, Donald Haines and Mickey Mortin. Phil Rosen directed.

At 20th Century-Fox, "Step Lively, Jeeves," a P. G. Wodehouse comedy, was completed. Arthur Treacher will be seen in the title role.

WARNER finished "The Case of the Stuttering Bishop," comedy mystery drama. The lengthy cast lists Donald Woods, Ann Dvorak, Joseph Crehan, Edward McWade, Mira McKinney, Linda Perry, Tom Kennedy, Veda Ann Borg, Douglas Wood, Anne Nagel, George Lloyd.

Of the two films started by Radio, "Stepping Toes" (tentative title) is undoubtedly the more important. A singing, dancing musical being produced on lavish scale, it will feature Ginger Rogers with Fred Astaire. Currently included in the cast, with many more to be added, are Edward Everett Horton, Eric Blore, Harriet Hoctor and Margot Grahame. Mark Sandrich is directing. The second feature, "China Passage," dramatic romance, will present Constance Worth, Vinton Haworth, Gordon Jones, Leslie Fenton, Dick Elliott, Alice Craig, George Irving and Frank M. Thomas. Edward Killy is directing.

"Whether or No," dramatic romance with considerable comedy content, was started by Columbia. The cast lists Ralph Bellamy, Ida Lupino, Ralph Forbes, Walter Connolly, Granville Bates, James Flavin and Edward McWade. Alfred E. Green is directing.

Paramount started "Internes Can't Take Money," a drama. With Alfred Santell directing, the cast presently includes Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea, Lloyd Nolan, Stanley Ridges, Gaylord Pendleton, and Irving Bacon.

Universal's contribution to the new work is "We've Had Our Moments," a modern comedy romance. The film reunites Sally Eilers and James Dunn in the leading roles.

Sixth of the new films is Republic's "Without a Net," romance and drama against an adventure background. It will present June Travis, Donald Cook, Willard Robertson, Betty Compson and Charlie Murray as principals. John Auer is directing.

EXHIBITORS FIND "FREE" PUBLICITY VALUELESS

Walsh-Mann Theatre, with Reduced 'Ad' Rate and No Free Space, Increases Its Grosses

"Free" publicity, review "plugs" and gratis art displays in newspapers are virtually valueless in cities having populations of 100,000 and under, according to the conclusions reached by California independent owners after a three-year experiment. This conclusion is considered contrary to the beliefs of most exhibitors, who for years have been putting press agentry pressure on their local papers for "free" space on the stars and the pictures playing their theatres.

Concluding an experiment started in 1934, Morgan Walsh and George Mann, well-known operators of a sizeable circuit of theatres in northern and central California, have definitely decided that theatre-page publicity "plugs" exert little or no influence on the theatre-buying public in small cities and towns.

The Walsh-Mann Redwood Theatres Company cites auditors' figures covering the three-year period to show that generously increased advertising lineage used without any publicity stories or pictorial display substantially increased the income of its three theatres in the unnamed central California city where the experiment was conducted. The increase in that place, which has a 20,000 population, is said to have been entirely out of proportion to the normal business increase enjoyed by all the opposition houses which also had the advantages of reviews, stories and publicity pictures in the press.

Walsh and Mann, through Redwood, operate the Minor theatre, at Arcata; Williams, at Dinuba; Liberty, Rialto and State, at Eureka; State, at Fort Bragg; Fortuna, in Fortuna, and the State in Ukiah, all in California. They have interests in additional houses in California and Oregon in association with others.

Their figures compiled during the experiment show that during 1933 a total of 4,550 inches of advertising was used by the three Walsh-Mann theatres in the city chosen in the test. Free reviews, stories and publicity of various sorts were included, with payment made to the newspapers on a basic rate of $1.25, scaling down to 85 cents an inch with the increased use of space.

The Redwood theatre men proposed to the advertising manager of the local newspaper that their three theatres be given a flat rate of 58 cents an inch for advertisements, but entirely without any publicity representation on the motion picture-drama page. The offer was accepted.

Under the 58-cent inch rate, the three theatres used 8,200 inches in 1934, 10,300 in 1935, and nearly 20,000 in 1936, to date, at an approximate reduction of one-third their previous advertising rate.

Then, despite the complete absence of pictures and free stories, Walsh and Mann say, the added space which they were able to purchase at the reduced rate so dominated the drama section that their theatres have played consistently to better grosses than have the other houses in the district.

The frank conclusions of Mr. Walsh and Mr. Mann come at a time when dozens of daily newspapers everywhere are attempting to enforce strict bans on "free" publicity as such. The idea has been received by exhibitors with misgivings and has brought bitterly contested results in many cities.

Peter Magaro Dies; Pioneer Exhibitor

Peter Magaro, pioneer motion picture operator in Harrisburg, Pa., and who, in 1906, opened his first film exchange in Central Pennsylvania, died last Saturday morning in the Riverdale Hospital, Miami, Fla. He had been ill since the summer of 1935, when he was severely injured in an automobile accident near Atlantic City, N. J. He was at one time rated as a millionaire and was nationally known in the industry, having once been a member of the executive board of the Motion Picture Operators of America.

Mr. Magaro, born in Naples, Italy, in 1880, came to Harrisburg in his youth and started life as a newsboy. He established a burlesque theatre there early in the present century. He introduced pictures in Harrisburg and shortly afterwards built up a chain of theatres in nearby towns, including Mechanicsburg, Steelton, Carlisle, Newport, Newville and Lewistown. In 1914 he bought the Star theatre in Market Street, opposite the Pennsylvania railroad station approach, and in 1921 rebuilt the theatre at an expenditure of $250,000 and changed the name to the New Regent. In 1925 he sold this theatre to the late Marcus Loew, and it has ever since been operated as Loew's Regent.

Mr. Magaro made frequent trips back to his native Italy and took pride in the fact that he was several times received by Premier Mussolini, who presented him with an autographed photograph. He is survived by his widow, a son, Peter, Jr., two years old, and a daughter by a former marriage. Burial will be in Harrisburg.

Crime Films Seen No More Harmful Than Literature

Detective, murder and adventure stories and stories of crime when depicted on the motion picture screen have no more effect on young audiences than similar stories which are widely read in book form, according to a British chief justice, Lord Hewart.

Speaking at the annual dinner of the British Kinematograph Society, Lord Hewart said that those who object to such pictures fear that "adventures of passion and crime, when they are portrayed before the eyes of young persons, tempt them to pursue irresponsible and reckless lives, so that shortly the world may be expected to become a deplorable hive of murder, elopement and blackmail."

Answering this argument the chief justice said:

"Well, generations of men have in their youth read hair-raising stories of detection and adventure. Their sympathies, if they were healthy and wise, were no doubt often on the side of the criminal in his effort to escape. They sometimes preferred perhaps the qualities of the pirate or the burglar to the dismal proprieties of their victims or the cultivated suavity of the police.

"There is something to be said for Bill Sikes and his kind. And the criminal who exhibits heroic qualities may naturally be a more popular figure in fiction than the persons whose virtues and piety remain undimmed and unattractive from the first page to the last. Yet it is seldom suggested that children who read works of that kind, many of them to be numbered among the classics of literature, are thereby encouraged to entertain evil designs or to indulge in criminal practices."

Lord Hewart reminded his audience that if films of crime and adventure have one feature in common it is that in the end the criminal is brought low and virtue triumphs. "If virtue triumphed in actual life as regularly as on the films this world might be an easier place both to police and understand," he said.

Regarding the fear on the part of some would be censors that it is not good for the masses to be introduced to the luxuries and extravagances which the films often depict, the chief justice said that "the world consists neither of classes nor masses but of individuals." He added that "it might perhaps be thought to be of some slight service to give people relief, if only for a few hours, from the drabness, the routine and the limitations of their ordinary lives."

Continuing this argument the speaker said: "Why should it be suggested that these things are harmless in books but harmful on the screen? And why seek to eliminate from human nature the interest which most men and women seem to take in an atmosphere that is free from care and luxurious beyond the dreams of avarice?"

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

While great American statesmen have nickel-cigars named after them, baseball players loan their names to candy bars, and Broadway vaudevillians have their monikers affixed to ham sandwiches, it remains for our own Mary Pickford to achieve the signal and single honor of having a fly named after her.

One year and six months ago William Lang, Toronto, Canada, insurance executive, arranged a fishing party for Miss Pickford. After the li'l lady departed for California, Mr. Lang created a fishing fly named in her honor. Its top wing is of feathers from the American golden pheasant, which represents Mary's golden hair; a tiny shoulder is represented by a bit of feather from the blue chatterbird of India. There is a flat silver body representing the silver skies of Canada, Miss Pickford's birthplace, and a white streamer of polar bear under the feather. A tinge of red from the Greek sparrow is at the tail. Mr. Lang presented the fly, encased in a solid gold frame on a silver satin background, to Miss Pickford at Pickfair.

The other day he arrived at New Orleans for several days of fishing, and for the occasion proudly displayed his own "Pickford Fly" with all of its multicolored contraptions.

But Mr. Lang did not get a single strike, a bite, or even a nibble.

The course is titled "Body Mechanics."

"Little" Mickey (Freckles) Daniels, he of the original Hal Roach "Our Gang" tribe, returned the other day to the Roach studios in California to appear in another "Gang" comedy, for old times sake. Mickey is 22, towers six feet, and shows more red hair than in the old days. He now has so many freckles that if he'd pull them a bit closer together he'd have a swell tan!

Federal legislators have been affected pleasurably by the tonal emanations from the deft acoustical treatments of our best motion picture theatres in Washington, and oft have wondered whether the same scientific treatments could not be given to some of their legislative halls where the noises of bellowing lawmakers make a din that's unsurpassed. Taking their cue, then, from modern motion picture assembly, a group of the more passive Washington gentry have arranged to greet their colleagues at the opening of Congress, this week, with a completely-silenced dining room in the House of Representatives.

Last January, Representative Allen Treadway, Republican, of Massachusetts, arose in the middle of a block booking debate, or something, and cried from the floor of the House: "May I inquire whether any effort has ever been made in connection with the House restaurant to lessen the noise of rattling dishes, floor noises and so forth?"

Lawmakers fresh from the restaurant bedlam below gave their undivided attention, cancelling from their collective mind, for the moment, the more weighty problems of the nation's future.

Money was not available immediately, but when the second deficiency bill came up, they managed to wiggle an appropriation out of the millions allotted for federal motion picture projects, federal theatre projects, Sinclair Lewis projects, etc.

Vigorously-sipped soup that has echoed through the dining room in torrential tones will now sound like a gentle tingle from a delicately tuned zither played by the first zitherer of the Music Hall Symphony Orchestra. The crass touch of spoon metal against crockery, which once drove legislators to distraction, now will give a melodiouos effect akin to the fondling of a muted violin string.

They say that Ferde Grofe, the composer, is completing a tone-poem, "Hollywood Ballet," which will be presented shortly at Carnegie Hall. It depicts, musically, an average day on the lot of a big movie studio. The other afternoon Mr. Grofe telephoned Mervyn Le Roy at Warners' studio in California to get an idea of the daily routine of an important film director. Mr. LeRoy's secretary answered the phone. She was asked: "What is Mr. LeRoy's schedule for today?"

"Today," she replied, "Mr. LeRoy is seeing his dentist in the morning and in the afternoon he's supervising a change in his swimming pool."

Connie brought the book to the guest's table and asked: "Won't you autograph your work, Mr. Beach?" "My name isn't Beach," was the reply, "but I'll be glad to autograph my work. Bring me your icebox—I'm Rex Cole!"

The Dionne quintuplets are not always the honey-and-sugar sweeties pictured by Fox Films in its series of Dionne quintuplets feature pictures. Ol' Doctor Dafoe up there in Callander, Ontario, must needs use a "club" on the kids once in a while to keep 'em under control.

Cecile, for instance, got the idea the other day that it was very effective, in her spats with her sisters, suddenly to lean down and take a good, big bite out of one of them. And we don't mean a little bite. It wasn't very long before Annette caught on to the same idea of attack and started to do a little biting on her own—on her sisters.

So, Doctor Dafoe looked to a small, entirely barren room in the nursery hospital, and when Cecile and Annette continued their man-eating careers, the nurses simply took them, one at a time, and shut them up in this solitary confinement. Next time the Doc is going to put them out.

Nor does Doctor Dafoe's troubles end there, for hundreds of moviegoers have written him to say that it's really too bad that the children's eyelashes are touched up with mascara before being photographed by Fox Film. The quintuplets have naturally long eyelashes, and no makeup has ever been used in photographing them.

Paramount advertisements in the trade press of late have been screaming the question:

"WHO is Dorothy Lamour?"

Whitney Bolton, not Paramount, supplies the answer:

A Chicago night club "torch" singer was seen some months ago by a Paramount talent scout from New York. He kept her in mind. After a while she came to New York with a band and sang with it in a local night club. The Paramount talent scout saw her again, sent for her. She could sing, he concluded, but couldn't act for apples. So he put her into Paramount's we-hope-it-develops talent school at a cost to Paramount of about $50 a week. She was there 11 weeks, and had six or more weeks to go before even a test was to be made.

The gal got impatient, quietly got herself an agent. She and the agent flew to Hollywood and did a high-pressure act, with the result that the Coast office signed her. Her tale was that another big studio was after her services. Several days later Paramount in Hollywood learned that the home office in New York had her, and for about $500 a week—less!

WHO, indeed, is Dorothy Lamour?

MEXICAN PRODUCERS ASK LEGISLATIVE AID

Seek More Theatres to Show Product, and Reduced Taxes, to Offset Foreign Films

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

Organized Mexican motion picture makers again are viewing with alarm the landslide competition from foreign films, especially American. Asserting that imported films monopolize this market, as 96 per cent of pictures exhibited in Mexico are foreign and that of the 500 shown each year in the national capital but 20 are home made, the Mexican Motion Picture Producers Union has petitioned the Mexico City government to toss the domestic industry a lifebelt in the form of some regulation which will afford more cinemas, or even theatres, for the exhibition of home-made pictures, and in reduced taxation.

The Union says that distributors of foreign films take over the programs of most Mexican City cinemas for as long as a year in advance, and urges the civic government to act pronto to give Mexicans an exhibition break in 1937, as distributors of imported pictures now are busy lining up the houses for next year.

Taxation, says the Union, is a proportionately greater burden for the Mexicans than it is for the foreigners. It asserts that oftimes the government embargoes Mexican pictures because of defaults in tax payments, a circumstance that is certainly not encouraging for the home industry and smacks much of the old tale of the goose and the golden eggs.

The way things now stand, much needed capital shies clear of the Mexican production industry, the Union charges.

The Mexican government is sponsoring exhibition of another series of Russian pictures. The first is "Sailors of Krondstadt." It is being shown at the Teatro Hidalgo, Mexico City, a government operated theatre, at the cut rate price scale of seven to 14 cents.

The new national film censors have demonstrated that their rules apply as much to Mexican pictures as they do to foreign. This was shown in the order for much cutting and renovating at considerable expense to the producers, "El Rosal Bendito" ("The Blessed Rose Bush") because it did not conform with the ideals of the Mexican government and was not an authentic interpretation of Mexican customs, life and thought trends.

The board has a woman member, appointed to give a feminine viewpoint. The appointee is Señorita Elenea Sanchez Valenzuela, journalist and author. She is Mexico's first woman film censor.

Mexico City's Chinese colony is protesting "The General Died at Dawn," which is being exhibited in the Mexican capital. The colony has asked the government to order extensive censoring of the film. It charges that the picture offends Chinese dignity by presenting China as a barbarous land and Chinese as a grade lower than savages. This is the first protest Mexico City Chinese ever have made against a picture. They have been fond of various Chinese pictures and were enthusiastic about the "Fu Manchu" series and "Shanghai Express."

Discouraged by the practice of American producers either giving away or selling at very reduced rates their short subjects in Spanish America, Mexican producers have decided to abandon making little pictures. It seems that American companies supply short product to Latin America largely for advertising purposes.

These are busy days for Mexican producers, despite their plaint about wholesale foreign competition. In the Mexico City sector, all studios are booked up to the end of February. Expectations are that 1937 production will be from 30 to 40 pictures, all features. Production this year will not exceed 20 features.

Settlement is looked for momentarily in the strike that has lasted for several months against the studio of the National Motion Picture Producing Company, Mexico City. This company made Mexico's first "talkie." The strike is for higher pay and other concessions.

Maury Cohen Signed By RKO as Producer

Maury Cohen, president of Invincible Pictures, has been signed by RKO in Hollywood as a producer. Samuel J. Briskin, RKO vice-president in charge of production, announced that Mr. Cohen's assignments will not be limited to "B" pictures, as had been reported.

George Batcheller, Jr., president of Chesterfield Pictures, said last week that his company would not be affected by the withdrawal or disbanding of Invincible. He pointed out that the companies were separate business organizations and that their combination of interests was limited to office and distribution services.

Paramount Meet Follows Zukor Dinner on Coast

The management and executive staffs of Paramount Pictures will be taken up with two events of note this week in Hollywood: The company's own banquet in honor of the Silver Jubilee of its board chairman, Adolph Zukor, on Thursday evening, at the studio, and the annual production conference of executives and theatre partners, to be held at the Hotel Ambassador on Friday and Saturday.

The banquet will be in the studio and will be attended by all of the players, producers and directors on the compay's contract list, executives from both New York and Hollywood, theatre partners, exhibitors and a large number of men and women who have been associated with the founder of Paramount during the past quarter century.

The dinner will be followed by a dance and entertainment and the one-hour show will be broadcast over a coast-to-coast National Broadcasting Company network. Cecil B. DeMille will open the broadcast with introductory remarks and Jack Benny will be master-of-ceremonies. Stars scheduled to appear include Ben Blue, Bob Burns, Charles Butterworth, Bing Crosby, Johnny Downs, Dorothy Lamour, Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray, Martha Raye, Shirley Ross, Gladys Swarthout, Eleonore Whitney and Leopold Stokowski and his symphony orchestra.

The annual production conference will be conducted by William LeBaron, managing director of production, with special sessions in charge of Barney Balaban, president; Mr. Zukor, and Neil Agnew, vice-president and general sales manager. A preliminary survey of Paramount's product for 1937-38 will be made with special attention being given to several major productions being planned.

Executives from the studio who will attend include Mr. Zukor, Eugene Zukor, Mr. LeBaron, A. M. Botsford, Harold Hurley, Bogart Rogers, Jeff Lazarus, C. J. Dunphy, Fred Leahy, Mel Shauer, George Bagnall, A. C. Martin, Henry Herzbrun, Jacob Karp, Manny Wolfe, Boris Morros and Sam Frey.

Executives from New York will include Mr. Balaban, Mr. Agnew, J. J. Unger, Charles Reagan, Russell Holman, Austin Keough, Robert M. Gillham, Y. Frank Freeman, Albert Deane, George Weltner, John Hicks, Jr., Milton Kusell, John Graham and Walter Cokell.

Paramount's theatre associates will include John Balaban, Chicago; E. V. Richards, New Orleans; Karl Hoblitzelle, Dallas; N. A. Nathanson, Toronto; Frank Walker, New York; M. A. Meanwhile, in New York, the Broadway Merchants' Association voted to give Mr. Zukor a testimonial dinner in commemoratio of his silver anniversary on or about January 25.

AUSTRALIAN PRODUCER INCREASING OUTPUT

Cinesound Adding Outdoor Film Unit; Legion of Decency for Commonwealth

by CLIFF HOLT

in Melbourne

Despite the belief of the company's directors that the New South Wales Quota legislation has failed, Cinesound, Australia's leading producing organization, has announced its intention of continuing its policy of regular and permanent production.

Making the announcement on behalf of the Board, Stuart F. Doyle, managing director, said that Cinesound intended to make five to six features a year for world distribution, and that, in addition, a second unit will be formed to concentrate on outdoor films. Through its affiliations in Great Britain, Cinesound has opened up the English market and expects to gain from there 40 per cent of its costs. The balance will come from Australia and New Zealand, with the possibility of a small amount from foreign countries, but no revenue is expected from the United States.

Features on the 1936-37 schedule are as follows: "Orphan of the Wilderness," "It Isn't Done," "Tall Timbers," "Robbery Under Arms," "Pearl of Price" and "Yellow Sands." Each picture will be directed by Ken G. Hall, who has made such a pronounced success of the previous Cinesound releases, almost all of which have returned profits.

It seems a little early at this stage to say whether the Quota Act has actually failed, though if it is to succeed it is time more energy was shown by these producers who worked so enthusiastically to bring it about. There is no possibility of the first year's requirements having been fulfilled; but between now and the end of 1937, investors may acquire more confidence and local cameras will then whirr happily.

Of the Australian films most recently released the majority have grossed highly satisfactory returns in Sydney, but public response hasn't been nearly so enthusiastic in other capitals. "Thoroughbred" and the Charles Farrell vehicle, "The Flying Doctor," scored exceptionally well in Sydney, but by no means repeated that performance in Melbourne. The same applies to "Uncivilized," the Expeditionary Film production featuring the English actor, Dennis Hoey.

"Rose Marie" Litigation

Litigation continues between Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and J. C. Williamson, Ltd., over the release in Victoria of "Rose Marie." Owner of the performing rights except for a reservation by the grantors of "moving picture film rights," J. C. Williamson seeks to enjoin MGM from exhibiting the play by means of sound pictures. This application was upheld when brought before the Chief Justice of Victoria (Sir Frederick Mann), whose opinion, however, has since been reversed by the state full court. It is likely that J. C. Williamson, Ltd., will now take the case before the High Court of Australia.

Legion of Decency Move

Decisions by the Roman Catholic Hierarchy of Australia, but not yet officially promulgated, are tantamount to establishment of a Legion of Decency system in the Commonwealth. According to Archbishop Duhig of Brisbane, one of the leading figures at the Adelaide Conference, every Catholic once a year will promise not to attend films considered offensive to truth and Christian morality. A central national reviewing office will be established in Sydney, and will classify films under three headings: (1) Those permitted to all; (2) Those permitted with reservations; (3) Those condemned as harmful or positively bad. Since conditions, he said, are much the same in Australia as in America, the classifications of the American Legion of Decency will be adopted in Australia.

The Commonwealth film censor, Cresswell O'Reilly, is a lay preacher in the Methodist Church.

Racing Competition

Melbourne city and suburban theatres are faced with serious Saturday night opposition by night trotting meetings with legalized betting. A bill licensing night trotting already has passed through the Legislative Council and little opposition is expected from the Assembly. Once through the Assembly it will become law and it is estimated that 30,000 potential theatre-goers will patronize the trots each Saturday night meeting. What these folk will pay in admissions and lose in betting transactions looks like a decidedly serious loss to box offices. Financial interests behind the trotting enterprise worked quietly and swiftly to push it through the Council, since the Bill was on its way to the Assembly before the theatrical industry heard much more than scant rumors that anything was in the wind.

Bringing Sulu Print

G. F. Harris, president of Filippine Film Productions, Inc., at Manila, will arrive in Hollywood early in February with prints of "Zamboanga," feature made by a crew of 25 over a period of eight months among the islands of the Sulu Archipelago, between Borneo and Zamboango. Three months were spent on underwater pearl diving scenes.

Passion Play Film Imported

The Golgotha Corporation, headed by Captain George McL. Baynes, has brought the film "Golgotha" to America and has completed an English version. The picture depicts the life of Jesus Christ, and was produced in France by Jules Duvivier.

MPTOA Session Plans Announced

The 17th annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be held at the Miami Biltmore hotel, Miami, Fla., on March 16th, 17th and 18th, and, according to a bulletin of the MPTOA issued to its members this week, it is expected to be the largest national convention of theatre owners ever held in the United States.

The theme of the conference will be better theatre management and discussions will be held on improved theatre design, construction and equipment; better merchandizing of motion picture entertainment, and ways and means of increasing attendance and maintaining high standards of exhibition.

A feature of the meeting will be displays and demonstrations of new theatre equipment, construction materials, signs and advertising accessories. Talks will be given by technicians, engineers and architects and the members will be invited to exchange views on specific subjects in this field.

The general business sessions will be devoted to discussion of trade practices, double features, the music tax, the score charge, overbuying and unreasonable clearance, radio competition, court decisions, pending legislation, labor relations and other industry problems.

Elaborate social programs have been arranged and officers of the organization have obtained special hotel rates for those attending the three-day conference.

Newspaper Critics Name 'Best' Films

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Mutiny on the Bounty" and Columbia's "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" divided honors in two newspaper critics' polls announced this week on "the best" of 1936.

Newspaper reviewers in Film Daily's "ten best pictures" balloting selected the following as the best of 1936:

"Mutiny on the Bounty," MGM; "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," Columbia; "The Great Ziegfeld," MGM; "San Francisco," MGM; "Dodsworth," United Artists-Samuel Goldwyn; "The Story of Louis Pasteur," Warners; "A Tale of Two Cities," MGM; "Anthony Adverse," Warners; "The Green Pastures," Warners, and "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Warners.

The New York Film Critics' Association selected the following as representing their idea of "the best" of the year:

"Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," Columbia, the best English-speaking picture; "La Kermesse Heroique," ("Carnival in Flanders"), American Tobis, the best in the foreign language division.

The New York critics also selected Luise Rainer for the best female performance of the year award for her work in "The Great Ziegfeld" and the best male performance was adjudged to have been Walter Huston's in "Dodsworth." Rouben Mamoulian was picked as having given the best direction of the year in "The Gay Desperado."

Mystery Melodrama

The mysterious theft of a valuable diamond owned by a Chinese warlord and the subsequent attempt to smuggle the gem into the United States, which entails a welter of killings, is combined with the full quota of skullduggery and intrigue and with drama-hued romance, to form the theme of this picture. It is modernly timed. The locales are Shanghai, aboard a transpacific liner where most of the action takes place, and the San Francisco water front. The story is essentially mystery drama, which has a sort of related topical significance as it pertains to things Chinese because of the recent kidnaping of and releasing of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek by the warlord, Marshal Chang.

While dealing in straight theatrical elements, the story, to make good title significance, also gives an insight into operations of undercover agents of the U. S. Customs Bureau. The girl in the cast, a figure in most of the dramatic incident and the center of the romantic contrast, is just such a person.

The story is an original by Talor Caven. The scenario is by J. Robert Bren and Edmund L. Hartman. Bren's recent writing activities have included "Without Orders" and "High Tension." Hartman has been engaged with lighter material, typically "Champagne Waltz" and "The Princess Comes Across." The direction is by Edward Killy, maker of the recent "Wanted, Jane Turner."

A newcomer, Constance Worth, imported from Australia, has the title role. The hero is Vinton Haworth, the original Jack Arnold of the Myrt and Marge radio broadcast, who made an auspicious debut in "Without Orders." To achieve the proper story and local atmosphere, several Chinese actors have important parts. These are Philip Ahn, Lotus Long, Lotus Liu, Moi Ming and Taetsui Komai. Among familiar screen names the cast also lists Leslie Fenton, a fixture in practically all Chinese-localed films; Gordon Jones, Frank M. Thomas, George Irving, Joyce Compton and Dick Elliott.

Swing High, Swing Low

(Paramount)

Romantic Drama

To be embellished with music and drama, "Swing High, Swing Low," despite its background trappings, will tell a straight romantic and dramatic story. Starting in Panama, it involves two young persons, penniless and attractive. The boy becomes somewhat of a sensation in the entertainment world of Panama and New York. Conceited, self conscious and quite a bit swellheaded, he forgets the girl he married, who was his inspiration. As rapidly as he skyrocketed to fame he drops to failure. In the end, however, love and devotion conquer misunderstandings and happiness rules again.

Fred MacMurray and Carole Lombard, who achieved quite a measure of popularity as a team in "Hands Across the Table" and "The Princess Comes Across," and both of whom scored other individual successes in the past year, are starred. Worthwhile names are noted in the principal support: Charles Butterworth, accomplished comedian currently appearing in "Rainbow on the River;" Dorothy Lamour, now in "The Jungle Princess;" Jean Dixon, Harvey Stevens and Franklyn Pangborn. Others filling atmospheric and character roles are Cecil Cunningham, Charles Arnt, Anthony Quinn, Henry Semels, Christ Martin, Charles Stevens and Ralph Remley.

Based on a play by George M. Watters and Arthur Hopkins, the screen play is by Oscar Hammerstein II and Virginia Van Upp. Music and lyrics are by Sam Coslow and Al Siegel, Leo Robin and Ralph Rainger, Charles Kisko and Siegel and Phil Boutelje. Dance effects, which add to the film's production quality, were staged by LeRoy Prinz. The director, Mitchel Leissen, recently completed "The Big Broadcast of 1937."

While it is expected that MacMurray will entertain musically with his trumpet, Miss Lombard will be heard for the first time as a screen songstress. She will have two vocal numbers, "I hear a Call to Arms" and "Then It Isn't Love." In addition to her other contributions Miss Lombard also will be seen as a night club tap dancer.

Nancy Steele is Missing

(20th Century - Fox)

Drama

This is the story of a man who commits a heinous crime and lives to see life play strange tricks on him. It is the story of a desperate and dangerous man who becomes an innocent victim of the law's persecution but under the lash of life effects a moral regeneration within himself and thus prevents another more vicious crime.

With story by Charles Francis Coe, noted for his grimly realistic material, the screen play is credited to Gene Fowler and Hal Long, a pair of writers exceptionally accomplished in endowing their works with robust flavor. In considering it from the point of view or adaptability to the two players whom it features, Victor McLaglen, Academy Award winner, because of "The Informer," and Peter Lorre, currently in the dramatic "Crack-up," it seems to be ideal material which should bring out the best talents of both. More by allusion than literal display, it establishes McLaglen as a kidnaper to take him into prison where for 20 years he guards his secret,

In setting McLaglen and Lorre in the leading roles, Darryl Zanuck, whose penchant for strong drama of this character has been exemplified previously in several films, especially "Les Miserables," also has elected to support the pair with an exceptionally strong cast. It includes, among others, Walter Connolly, whose child was kidnaped; June Lang, McLaglen's victim and supposed daughter; Robert Kent, who shares the romantic contrast with her, and Shirley Deane, who eventually becomes Lorre's tool in the plot. Other players, as prison inmates, law officials and townsfolk, are Frank Conroy, George Taylor, Arthur Hohl, John Horrington, Kane Richmond, Margaret Fielding, DeWitt Jennings, Allen Cavan, George Chandler and Eric Wilston.

History is Made at Night

(UA - Walter Wanger)

Drama

Although a literal interpretation of this title might suggest it is a newspaper story, it is not. "History Is Made at Night" essentially is romance. In Paris, a fascinating stranger saves a wife from a compromising situation but accidentally kills a man while doing so. Acquaintanceship ripens into a love that infuriates the woman's jealous husband. The man is sought by French police as a murderer and kidnaper. The enraged husband vows he will send his wife's lover to the guillotine. There is a second meeting of the man and woman in New York. An interlude shows the wrecking of a luxury liner in an iceberg crash. The husband tries to kill himself and eventually the murder suspect exonerates himself, bringing happiness to the woman and to himself.

The original story is credited to Gene Towne and Graham Baker, a writer team whose accomplishments favorable and otherwise are familiar to the exhibitor world. The direction is by Frank Borzage, credited with the recently previewed "Green Light" (Warner) and many exceptional productions. It is being produced by Walter Wanger.

Charles Boyer, currently in "The Garden of Allah," and Jean Arthur, Calamity Jane in "The Plainsman," are featured. The supporting cast is small, but it includes a group of tried and true performers. Prominent are Leo Carrillo, currently appearing in "The Gay Desperado," Colin Clive, Ivan Lebedeff, George Meeker and Lucien Prival.

Park Avenue Lodger

(RKO Radio - Hirliman)

Comedy-Drama

The story told in this production is adapted from a Saturday Evening Post yarn of the same title written by Bruce Hutchinson. Embodying drama, romance and comedy, it details the adventures of a Park Avenue socialite (a roughneck wrestler at heart) who is sent by his magnate father into the lumber camps to be transformed from a supposed softie into a rugged he-man.

In the lead, George O'Brien has a typical role. His adaptability to the kind of part he is being called upon to portray has been demonstrated over a long series of successful thrill action photoplays. The young woman whose business he saves, and with whom he falls in love, is Beatrice Roberts, a newcomer to the screen. Principal supports include Bert Hanlon, Gertrude Short, remembered as featured in the famous "Telephone Girl" series, Willard Robertson, Ward Bond and Robert Emmett O'Connor.

The film is the second in the new series which O'Brien is making for George Hirliman, the first having been "Daniel Boone." It is being directed by David Howard, at the helm in several recent O'Brien pictures. The scenarists are Dan Jarrett and Ewing Scott. Like Howard, Jarrett has been associated with many O'Brien pictures, notably "The Cowboy Millionaire," "Border Patrolman," "Whispering Smith Speaks" and "Daniel Boone."

New China's Native Trade May Supersede Foreign Interests Which Built Shanghai

China's Ten-Year Drive for Nationalism Halted by Kidnapping of Chiang Kai-shek

Fifth City of the World, Shanghai Today Is Teeming With Native Enterprise, in Sharp Contrast to Century of Occidental Domination

LESS than a hundred years ago a handful of white men landing from merchant ships lying at anchor in the Whangpoo River, fourteen miles up from the mouth of the Yangtse, took possession of a little strip of mud flats adjoining the Chinese city of Shanghai and laid the foundations for what is today the fifth largest city of the world. These white men were the merchants of great Western nations, England, France, Holland, Russia, and the U. S., whose governments had just forcibly opened, for the second time in its long history, the doors of ancient China to Western trade.

The humming factories and large populations of Western nations needed raw materials and markets in which to sell their manufactured goods. They turned to China and, after several unsuccessful attempts to gain peaceful entrance, finally resorted to force of arms and secured the opening of six key cities to Occidental trade.

One of these cities was Shanghai, which was then nothing but an unimportant Chinese town of perhaps 76,000 souls, built on the mud flats of the Whangpoo River. A few acres of this land were set A few acres of a place where foreigners

Bobby Breen Stars in Romantic Story of the Deep South

"Rainbow on the River" Is Newest Triumph of Young Singing Sensation

Adapted from the well-known novel, "Toinette's Philip" by Mrs. C. V. Jamison, the screen play, "Rainbow on the River," presents nine-year-old Bobby Breen as a winsome waif raised in the South by a devoted Negro servant, Louise Beavers. Bobby is the young star who sky-rocketed to fame in his debut picture, "Let's Sing Again," after having won millions of fans through his singing on Eddie Cantor's radio program.

As the picture progresses, Bobby is taken away to live in New York by his wealthy Yankee grandmother played by May Robson. In this strange environment Bobby yearns for the colored mammy and the simple life they led in their humble cabin. Because of her hatred of the South, inspired by the loss of her son, Bobby's father, who died in the Civil War defending the futile cause of the Confederacy, the cold-hearted grandmother is reluctant to claim the Southern lad as kin. Bobby, however, finally melts her heart with his enchanting voice while innocently revealing his loneliness by singing those songs which ention of the story characters. Written by the foremost composers they were chosen for their wide appeal to every type of theater-goer.

Three immortal numbers by the beloved Stephen Collins Foster are sung by the young lyric tenor: "Ring, Ring de Banjo," "Old

Chiang Kai-shek's Abduction Creates Crisis in Far East

An event of basic world importance took place the week of December 10th in China. It was as if Hitler had been kidnapped by one of his lieutenants or Mussolini by one of his. In fact the strong man of Eastern Asia, Chiang Kai-shek, dictator of China, was kidnapped by a warlord of north China.

Battle of Greed

(Crescent - E. B. Derr)

Romantic Drama

In the manner in which the previous films in this series starring Tom Keene blended historical fact and romantic dramatic fiction, "Battle of Greed" is a story of physical and legal conflict. The locale is Virginia City, the time the period immediately following discovery of the famous Comstock silver lode. In a general way the story tells of a battle between powerful and greedy invested interests, able to corrupt courts and buy favorable decisions, against a cooperative group of miners, for possession of valuable mining claims. From a personal viewpoint, it depicts the fight which a determined young lawyer puts up against the octopus to protect the rights of his clients and friends, to clean up the courts and establish the mining laws of the state of Nevada. The picture is not a western in any interpretation. Yet it includes a full quota of the thrill action elements of adventure features.

One angle incorporated in the picture that is of distinct benefit to its entertainment and commercial value is the presentation of the character of Mark Twain when he was proprietor of the Virginia City newspaper and as friend and counsellor of Keene. The Twain characterization gives the story a zest not ordinarily found in this type of production.

The production may be sold as substantial entertainment that does not attempt to be too educational.

Under Cover of Night

(MGM)

Drama

Unlike the regular murder mystery drama, audiences know immediately just who the killer is in this picture, and exactly what his motive is. Possession of this information, however, instead of serving as a giveaway, rather causes the drama to be more intense and to give unique significance to the accompanying romance and meager but nevertheless effective comedy contrast. Knowledge of what it's all about seemed to give the audience which saw the preview in the Uptown theatre, Los Angeles, a different kind of interest in the film.

In common interpretation "Under Cover of Night" might be considered a throwback to the old ten-twenty-thirty cent stock company memories of happy bygone days. Modernly timed, however, and locale in a university, with the principals save the detective being a professorial group, the story deals in those essentials that the commoners either are or like to think they are familiar with.

The head of the physics department desires to retire. Four professors hope to succeed him. One less competent but more daring than the other three is determined that he will get the job no matter what the cost. His reputation has been built up mainly through the ability and faith of his wife. Alone aware of this circumstance, also knowing that she possesses the scientific notes which have elevated him to preeminence, he determines to get the formulae. By fright, which is actually murder, he causes her death.

Fast moving, different, with action and dialogue well balanced but with the value of illusion cleverly adapted, the film looks like one to excite considerable popular interest. While names in the cast are of appreciable exploitation value the story which, incidentally, is aptly titled, looms as the quality to sell. A refreshing change from the sort of stuff that seeks to battle and confuse, with or without justification, the film may be presented as acceptable fare for the mystery fans and also one that will engage general attention.—*G. The Black Legion

(Warner Brothers)

Melodrama

This is not, a formal screen announcement makes clear, a film based on facts.

There are facts, the newspapers have reported, which do parallel in striking degree this piece of fiction.

The facts are those related to the operations of a hooded organization functioning in the middle west, a while back, and these facts came to be pretty widely known.

To end this double bookkeeping without further ado, the film referred to here and the facts referred to without connection are as nearly identical as you expect them to be and probably that is the most important news there is to write about "The Black Legion."

It is not possible, you see, to say that the film closely parallels the facts, because the film pointedly declares that it does not. And it isn't possible to say that it does not, you see, because it does.

Probably it is possible, of course, to say to showmen that, if you would like a picture that is what you would expect this picture to be if you weren't told that it isn't, then this is the picture you would like. But all that is too confusing and means nothing.

The story is about a young man who gets into the clutches of a gang organized on what has become accepted as the original commercial basis of the Ku Klux Klan and who finally confesses his membership and an incidental murder, thereby bringing about the incarceration of his fellow members and the breaking up of the organization. It's longer and better than that sounds, or, in other words, more like the newspaper stories, which were, it is agreed, among the better sensationalisms of the past year.

Romantic Drama

Here is sound, substantial, dramatic entertainment that gives every evidence of attracting unusual popular attention. Well produced and directed and credibly acted, it tells a serious story in a dignified and impressive manner. A class film, it nevertheless is one that incorporates those elements that probe the deepest emotions. Like such films as "Arrowsmith," the original "The Miracle Man" and the more recent "Story of Louis Pasteur," it avoids theatrical artificiality and bases its bid for patron understanding and support on telling a human interest story in sincere and honest style.

Aiming to stimulate audience thinking in lines that encompass things mental, spiritual and physical, the picture has the earmarks of being a forerunner of many similar attractions. Probably the feature about the film that should create the most profound impression on the public is the fact that it credits audiences with being able to think and understand for themselves without resorting to any trite or banal tricks to get over the point of the story's theme.

centers about the manner of life they have elected to follow, the picture is distinctly not a hospital show. When Mrs. Dexter dies as a result of slipshod surgical treatment, young doctor Newell Paige prefers to accept responsibility in order that Dr. Endicott's reputation may remain unblemished. An outcast in his profession, Paige, who is loved by nurse Frances Ogilvie, meets and falls in love with Phyllis Dexter, daughter of the surgical martyr. When Phyllis learns Paige's identity, her affection turns to hatred, but the drama of this is graphically contrasted by the sacrifices which Frances makes to bring together again the two who she knows really love each other again, and by the manner in which the inspiring and philosophical character Dean Harcourt is worked into the story.

An epidemic breaking out, Paige, who is attempting to beat his way back, combines with bacteriologist Stafford to develop a serum which will eradicate the scourge. Their efforts successful, Paige is restored to his profession and with the love of Phyllis to serve as an inspiration he devotes his life to the service of humanity.

Well written and with constant demonstration that much thought was put into preparation and production, the film is directed and acted in a class manner, and is to be sold to the public in such ways that the people may be convinced that they are going to see something fully worthy of their time and attention. On its merits as a human document, the film commands the support and cooperation of members of the medical profession, the clergy and those individuals and organizations in any community whose influences may be expected to have an effect on rank and file patronage.

The Holy Terror

Comedy Drama

It was not alone the genial Holiday mood in which the audience witnessed the preview of this picture at the Uptown theatre, Los Angeles, that caused the patrons to give it a sendoff. General audience entertainment with particular appeal for the young folk, "The Holy Terror" is a deft combination of music, dancing, comedy, romance, light drama and exciting thrill action that makes for pleasing amusement. Not a big picture, but nevertheless one that should encounter no difficulty in making its auditors feel they are getting their money's worth, the film primarily is a laugh provoker. Wholesome and living, never resorting to forced or artificial stimulation, it moves speedily, contains the full quota of surprises and concludes with a novel and exciting climax.

With Jane Withers appearing to better advantage than in several of her more recent films, the supporting cast, particularly Anthony Martin, Leah Ray, El Brendel, Joe Lewis, John Eldredge, Fred Kohler, Jr., Gavin Muir and Gloria Roy, give creditable performances. As their work comes up on the screen, it reflects a spirited cooperation and teamwork which undoubtedly will be appreciated by audiences.

Localed in a naval aviation station, the story has to do with Commander Wallace's daughter, Corky, a mischievous miss with a penchant for causing and getting into all sorts of trouble. A trying problem to her dad, she nevertheless is the pal of all the gobs and particular buddy of Danny Walker. Mechanics of the early part of the story providing Miss Withers with ample opportunity to sing, dance and be funny while rehearsing a sailors's show, the film takes a romantic twist when Corky decides she'll marry Marjorie Dean to Danny. A new plane is being developed at the station, and spies, headed by Redman and Maria Blair, plot to steal the plans. While Corky is a pain in the neck to her father, she is a double riveted one to the conspirators. Though she is wise to what they are planning, her long series of escapades has served to convince her father that she is given to prankish exaggeration. Just when it looks as if the spies will be successful, Corky manages to arouse the station to the danger.

Entertainment quality of the film being that which is required for all family audiences, it also includes a brand of showmanship availability that should inspire exhibitors to go out and do something with the idea of making its entertainment worth known to general patronage.—G. M.

This'll Make You Whistle

(Wilcox-British)

Musical Farce

Technically probably a musical, this British production is more accurately described as a farce-burlesque. What songs there are become subsidiary to a series of comedy situations which are often as amusing as they are far-fetched; the dancing, and it is good, particularly in a solo rhumba and in a duet number by Jack Buchanan and Elsie Randolph, is also a secondary appeal. It is the story, or the lack of it, that makes "This'll Make You Whistle" amusing by reason of its sequences of absurd incident.

Adapted from a stage production, playing the Palace theatre, London, the film must be sold as a particularly efficient and quick-moving example of the type of entertainment, and the brand of humor, most in favor on the British light stage. Buchanan, best and most popular exponent of that sort of fare, is an asset according to your public's experience of, and reaction to, his methods and personality. What can be promised is speed, real humorous value in incident, and an atmosphere of spontaneity which may well balance the fact that the idiom is very distinctly English.

The story is a typical musical-comedy affair, in which Jack Buchanan is an un-athletic hero, betrothed to a super-horsewoman and sporting spirit, from whom he wishes to break free in order to marry a damsel with sedentary and non-athletic tastes more in accord with his own. There follow the more or less traditional absurdities of the hero staging a "wild party" in order to shock the puritanical uncle of his official fiancee, only to find that the undraped ladies and other accessories provide the uncle with good reasons for revising his principles. There's an air flight to Le Touquet by all concerned; an embroilment of the hero and his friend with the French police which is chiefly useful in permitting an amusing burlesque of that force. After an also amusing feminine masquerade by Buchanan and David Hutcheson, the coupled sort out in traditional style.

Well set, played with spirit, and with a considerable variety of farcical episode, it is nearer the target than most films of the kind made in England.

The picture went down to big laughs at a night trade show at the Phoenix theatre, London, where Buchanan is in the very front rank as a public attraction.—Bruce Allan, London.

Produced by Herbert Wilcox Productions. American release not fixed. From the Palace Theatre musical production by Jack Buchanan. Directed by Herbert Wilcox. Book by Guy Bolton and Fred Thompson. Strangers on Honeymoon

(Gaumont-British)

Comedy-drama

There is novelty in the combination of thrill melodrama and sheer burlesque in this adaptation of the Edgar Wallace novel, "The Northing Tramp." The production is also unusual in that, with backgrounds of rural America, it was produced in England with a mixed British-American cast. The entertainment appeal, provided always that the American atmosphere and accents pass scrutiny in the country where they belong, is very varied, the acting good, the incident speedy and as important as the talk, and there is at least one outstanding comedy episode well worth special attention from an exploitation point of view.

Chief actors in this scene are Anne Tucker McGuire and James Arnold as a millionaire bride and groom, on honeymoon. Their car is stolen by the hero, who gets away from a hue and cry. Thrilled by the intrusion of reality into their lives, previously ruled by dollars, the love birds gladly consent to be abducted in the rumble seat, and to help in breakdowns, and finally are left to tramp it, excited to the marrow by the fact of having been held up by an Englishman who turns out to be a real Lord. The amusing picture of a "dumb" bride by Miss McGuire, and the comedy angle of the kidnaped helping the kidnapers,—even to the extent of putting the police off the track,—make this episode a high-spot.

Here's the story. October Jones (Constance Cummings), niece of a small town storekeeper, in order to escape dependence, consents to marry Sam Wasser (Butler Hixon), ne'er-do-well son of the local boss, who has the uncle in his pocket. Sam turns up drunk for the marriage ceremony, accompanied by several friends in a similar condition and a hobo whom they also have forced to drink until he is semi-conscious. Sam has brought the down-and-out along because October told him she was marrying him only to escape her uncle, and that any old hobo would do as well.

October surprises everybody by acting on her word, marries the hobo, and carries him off with her to a deserted house for the night. Follows a thrill when two toughs come to search the house and October hides the still intoxicated hobo by running him from one floor to another in a service elevator. In the morning, it is revealed that the stranger is an Englishman (Hugh Sinclair), on his way to Canada to recover the two other portions of a map, revealing the position of a rich oil-field. On his track is his sinister woman-cousin, Elfrida (Beatrix Lehmann), also after the map, and she it is who has set the gunmen on his trail.

There follow spirited scenes of the dash for the Canadian border. October is seized and jailed; her husband, in the millionaire's suit, poses as the Governor's emissary and gets her out. About this time it leaks out that he is Lord Quigley. When, in due course, Canada is reached and the plan recovered, and Elfrida handed over to the police, the titled hobo and October decide their unusual marriage shall continue.

La Damigella di Bard

(Artisti Associati, Rome)

Drama

The story begins in Piedmont in 1858 and runs through sixty years. It is a poetical narration of the life of the Damigella di Bard, a sweet and charming young lady, rich and aristocratic, who loses everything because of the evil doings of the people near her. Old and poor, she keeps on smiling and trusting in God until the days she finds a lost nephew, who brings her back to wealth and comfort.

This is one of the best films that have been produced in Italy this season. Emma Grammatica, who is the best known Italian stage actress, gives a wonderful interpretation and is starred with Luigi Cimarra, Cesare Bettarini and Armando Migliari.

This picture should please all classes.

Porky of the Northwoods

(Warner Brothers)

Amusing

Our porcine pet Porky is pal and protector to all the wild life of the woods. Freeing the unfortunate animals from the traps set for them by the burly hunter, the good Samaritan Porky wins that hard hearted gentleman's enmity to the tune of a merry trouncing. But his many four footed friends following the tradition that an animal never forgets rush to the aid of their battered benefactor and in a series of amusing shots give the huntsman the merry beating he so justly deserves. The whole animated work, cleverly executed and livily presented, is sure fire entertainment, especially for the youngsters. Running time, seven minutes.

More Kittens

(United Artists)

Excellent

The antics of three playful kittens imbued with infectious gaiety serve to number this as one of the best of Walt Disney's animated Silly Symphonies. In characteristic feline manner, scaled down to fit their size, the three kittens cavort from prank to prank, to the consternation of a Negro servant. An indigent member of the canine family, though much abused by the kittens, in time of stress becomes their benefactor. Running time, 8½ minutes.

Hurling

(MGM)

Pete Smith Short

Showing scenes of the ancient Hibernian game called Hurling, a sport that makes our own American football seem like child's play, this short is certain to interest the male element of any audience and at least to amuse the women. In a series of well photographed shots the thrill and the excitement of the game is excellently reproduced and made contagious. Pete Smith matches the lively style of the players with his customary amusing and breezy repartee. Running time, 10 minutes.

Strike, You're Out

Fair

The title of this subject is apt to be a bit misleading, for the plot has nothing at all to do with a baseball game or anything remotely connected with that popular sport. Rather there is ralated how the morale of some striking housewives was broken. When the little women walk out of their kitchens to join the picket lines in protest for fairer working conditions for the overworked housewife, their wise husbands employ attractive feminine strikebreakers who seem to be more talented in the ways of song and dance than in domestic duties. As was to be expected, the fire of female jealousy melts the rebellious natures of the wives and they waste no time in rushing back to the not very welcome arms of their respective spouses. The fun is done with good intentions, the songs and dances lively but a bit repetitious, and it all adds up to a fairly amusing time. Running time, 15 minutes.

Screen Snapshots, No. 3

(Columbia)

Tennis in Hollywood

Another interesting number of the series, this concentrates on tennis and especially the Pacific Southwest Tournament in which a number of screen stars participated. Two matches are singled out by the camera, the Gracyn Wheeler versus Alice Marble and the doubles match between Fred Perry and Frank Shields against Errol Flynn and Elmer Griffin. Before play begins and while it is on, the camera shifts from time to time to the Hollywood celebrities, some 70 in all.

Trailing the Seahorse

(William Alexander)

Interesting

This is a very interesting subject on the seahorse. As an explanatory subject it is complete in detail and has some excellent photographic effects. It tells the story of a girl reporter who visits the aquarium in New York to get material for a story on the seahorse. From there she goes to Sayville, Long Island, where she embarks with Captain Daniel Collins, who has been catching seahorses for many years. The seahorse, a small underwater creature about an inch and a half to three inches long, is shown in its natural habitat. An encounter with a shark rounds out the subject. Produced by Nature Films Company. Narration by Johnny Martin. Running time, 11 minutes.

Annie Laurie

Splendid

Telling the simple tale of the two lovers, Annie Laurie and William Douglas, this is the story of how there was born from their great and lasting love the famous song of the title. Against a rich background of Scottish scenes, the tender theme portrays a fine blend of romance and drama, the tragic love of the two young people who were to be separated from each other by bitter family feuds and finally by death. Ann Rutherford, previously seen in such feature pictures as "The Harvester" and "Down to the Sea," makes an appealing picture as the lovely but unfortunate Scot lass. Stanley Morner sings the immortal lines of the beloved ballad in splendid style. The picture, directed by Joseph Sherman, deserves a prominent place on any program. Running time, 10 minutes.

A Boy and His Dog

(Columbia)

Good Cartoon

This is the story of a little boy who teased his even smaller pet. The boy's mother remonstrates with the boy, telling him that some day the dog will grow bigger and the boy then will be sorry because the dog will get even. The boy laughs and continues to tease. The boy dreams that the dog has grown as big as an elephant. In his enlarged size the dog makes the little boy do all the tricks that the dog formerly was forced to do. When the boy awakens he decides that enough is enough.

Knights for a Day

Funny

The mad, impish Marx Brothers of Monkeydom, Meany, Miny and Moe, become imbued with the spirit of the Christmas season and act Santa Claus for the benefit of some needy little ducklings. How the kindly disposed monks get the toys by politely confiscating the many presents of the rich but hard hearted Henrietta Hen serves to give a merry time. There is even a bit of a moral hidden away in it all, for when the irate Henrietta, proceeding to retrieve her gifts, sees the good done by them, she is suffused with the Yuletide cheer and goes generous. Funny at any time of the year, the comedy appears to be doubly so now. Running time, 7½ minutes.

Plane Devils

(Columbia)

Interesting

This is an interesting record of the history of aviation from the Wright Brothers and their "box-kite" to the present day streamline liners. It is not a complete history, as the subject touches only on the phases of development that through the years have been recorded by the camera. Seen are some of the unique creations, the product of man's imagination. The early seaplanes, the first dirigibles, rocket planes and helicopters are shown in actual flight. The subject winds up with dare-devil pilots stunting and a deliberate crash by a movie stunt flyer.

Passable

Produced by Bruce Merman, this pictorial feature of the scenic wonders of the grand canyons, the landscaped miracles of the state of Utah, presents some inspiring shots of architectural wizardry of nature. The color photography serves well to bring out the real splendor of the magnificent panorama. The narrative accompaniment of an old native relating the poetic rhapsodies of a visiting painter over the scenic glories could easily have been eliminated without detracting from the full enjoyment of the scenery. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Bluebook School

Conducted by

F. H. RICHARDSON

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 51B

Bluebook School Question No. 51B was: In a certain city it is proposed by the Board of Education to add projection to public school studies. It is not intended to teach practical projection, but only to include elementary electricity, optics, mechanics, magnetism, acoustics, etcetera. What is the reaction of Bluebook School students to this procedure? If adopted, what should be the minimum age of pupils admitted to this special course?

Again I shall omit names, as the list is quite too long to admit of publication, numbering hundreds. All those making acceptable answers regularly made good.

D. E. Birdsong (Tennessee) says: "I believe the procedure is quite all right if the matter be approached in the right way and the course be well planned. I only wish I might have had the opportunity to take such a course before taking up the work of projection. It would aid very, very many projectionists, myself included, to have the proposed grounding, acquiring which usually requires years of effort, very often not too successful for various reasons, one being lack of proper text books, and, Dad, that is not meant as a reflection upon the Bluebook, which I consider as the best book available for study in projection. No man can, merely by taking such a course, call himself a projectionist, because he will lack the necessary practical experience. It is the joining of technical knowledge with practice that marks the real projectionist. In my judgment a man should be 18 to 20 years of age before taking such a course, and should center his whole interest in it."

All owners of the new Bluebook turn to page 67 and in formula No. 2 substitute the letter I for L where it appears in the formula. Also please pencil in a capital E wherever the small "e" occurs.—F. H. R.

J. A. Zachritz (Oklahoma) is in opposition. He sets his views forth very clearly, as follows: "I believe it would be an impractical procedure to introduce subjects connected with projection into the already overcrowded public school curriculum other than those already taught in courses in physics, chemistry and mathematics. The basic elements of electricity, mechanics, optics and magnetism are all touched upon in those courses. If broadened further it would be almost necessary to include practical projection, which those planning the new departure are proposing to exclude. Projection of today is a subject which could only be competently grasped by the more mentally advanced students, therefore should be reserved for the trade schools, or should be taught through the unions.

"Elementary woodwork, printing, tin work, and so forth, now included in high school work, are subjects which tend to prepare young men for earning a livelihood. Medicine, law, electrical, chemical and mechanical engineering are not included, for the simple reason that the student must be older than high school age before his mental training and ability will enable him to handle them capably. I am of the opinion that the profession of projection demands an intellect and mental training fully equal to that demanded by any of the last named professions, if justice is to be done to the motion picture industry and its supporting public. I am of the further opinion that the introduction of such a course as is proposed would not justify the necessary expense entailed."

And now I present an equally excellent argument of approval by J. A. Prater, of the state of Washington.

"After careful consideration of this important question, I am of the opinion it would be an excellent plan to make available to public school students a course in elementary electricity, optics, mechanics, magnetism, acoustics and other basic principles pertaining to motion picture-sound projection work. Such a course would merely be a more extensive, exhaustive study of many of the subjects already covered briefly in the present general physics and science courses, plus a few other items peculiar to projection. For this reason students desiring to take up the proposed course should first be required to have completed the regular course in general science and physics. This would, at least in most cases, require two years in high school and would thus automatically set the minimum age limit at about 16 years.

"It is not ordinarily the intention of our public schools to provide highly specialized training in any one field, but it is, or should be, their intention to supply a general background of fundamental knowledge that will enable students later on to grasp and understand details of more advanced training in a specialized field. And that is the purpose such a course as is proposed would or should serve. It seems only just and fair to everything and everyone concerned that the public school student who seriously considers adopting projection as his profession should be able to learn the fundamentals of all the various branches of learning necessarily involved if the man is to be a truly efficient motion picture-sound projectionist.

"And now may I say something in reply to those who we may presume will answer this question with a more or less emphatic "no" on the ground that there are already many more projectionists than jobs. Personally I deny that there is any surplus of projectionists. True, there is a large surplus of men who claim to be projectionists. But claims are cheap and it takes hard work, strict attention to work, and much genuine knowledge to be able to make good on the claim. And what percentage of men now in projection rooms can really make good?

"I am convinced that a general course of fundamentals such as is proposed would finally restrict numbers, rather than produce as large a surplus of men as does the present system of permitting men to 'break in' without any really adequate apprenticeship, study or knowledge of what makes the 'wheels go 'round.' Another thing, after a considerable time spent in learning merely the fundamentals of knowledge required in projection work, the student would become discouraged or else would be likely to have high respect for his work as a profession and demand proportionately higher remuneration, delivering service well worth it. Men who just 'crash the gate' receive small payment because that is all they are really worth.

"The job of every projectionist depends upon the continued popularity of the motion picture as the public sees and hears it, and the public is steadily becoming more critical of its motion picture entertainment. If the presentation is improved by reason of better knowledge of fundamentals, as well it may be, theatre attendance will improve and every one will be benefited, including the exhibitor who might have to pay a bit more for the improved competency.

"And while I am about it, Dad, I still hold the Bluebook School to be the best bet of them all, because it combines both fundamental and practical projection problems and discusses them from more than one person's point of view, costing the student nothing except his effort and time."

Columbia

END OF THE TRAIL: Jack Holt, Louise Henry—This is a mighty good Friday-Saturday picture and I just wish there were more like it. A good combination of western and better class picture mixed. Above the average.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

FINAL HOUR, THE: Marguerite Churchill, Ralph Bellamy—A very good program picture, which met with favorable audience reaction doing normal business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LONE WOLF RETURNS, THE: Melvyn Douglas, Gail Patrick—A particularly clever production, which was well played by Melvin Douglas. Would advise if you have a large Catholic following to be wary of this picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre. Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THEY MET IN A TAXI: Chester Morris, Fay Wray—All in all this is a good picture and will please most of them, but it could be lots better.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

TUGBOAT PRINCESS: Walter C. Kelly, Edith Fellows—Some said it was good but I still think that most of the people are too easily pleased in this town. The rest said just what I was thinking all during the picture.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

TWO-FISTED GENTLEMAN: James Dunn, June Clayworth—Ran this picture as one-half of a double bill. Didn't hear any complaints, but suppose that they are too tired to complain after sitting through two features and a comedy. Played December 19.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TWO-FISTED GENTLEMAN: James Dunn, June Clayworth—Another better than average program picture that hit the spot. Smart aleck prize fighter is played to perfection by Dunn.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

First National

CAPTAIN'S KID, THE: Guy Kibbee, Sybil Jason—A fair picture that did plenty of business on Bank Night when a pot was boiling. Didn't hear many complaints, so guess it pleased the majority.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS: Joe E. Brown, June Travis—Joe Brown pictures go over very well and one should not miss playing this picture. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 22-23.—Albert Heffernan, Lynx Theatre, Coopersville, Mich. Small town patronage.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS: Joe E. Brown, June Travis—Can't be beat for my patronage. Foolish for me to double feature it but I ran it with "The General Died at Dawn" and near busted the doors Christmas and did better than average business Saturday. Running time, 69 minutes. Played December 25-26.—S. A. Kimball, Sokokis Theatre, Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS: Joe E. Brown, June Travis—Another good, peppy feature with Joe E. Brown. Joe always pleases. Running time, 69 minutes. Played November 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage

DOWN THE STRETCH: Patricia Ellis, Dennis Moore—It was what we needed for the action part of our double bill.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Grand National

IN HIS STEPS: Eric Linden, Cecilia Parker—This is an excellent program picture, suitable for the whole family. Clean and entertaining in every respect. We played this for Christmas. Just the picture for this occasion. The only fault about this picture is the title and the cast. Neither one meant a thing at the box office. Running time, 79 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me

Rockefeller Center, New York

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This picture was one of the best pictures that we have had the pleasure of playing for a long time. These two stars will do business for you. The print which I received on this picture was in perfect condition and it would be worth your while to go back and pick it up as it will never grow old as box office attraction. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 25-26.—Albert Heffernan, Lynx Theatre, Coopersville, Mich. Small town patronage.

DEVIL IS A SISSY, THE: Freddie Bartholomew, Jackie Cooper, Mickey Rooney—A very good picture, ran on Bank Night, to good business and everybody was pleased. Metro gets plenty of dough for this class of pictures, but I doubt their worth. Run this, if you can buy it right. The title hurts the draw, but get a bunch of kids in on a matinee some way and that is all you will need.—Mayme P. Mussellman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GORGEOUS HUSSY, THE: Robert Taylor, Joan Crawford—A big flop at the box office. The awful title killed the picture. Another one of Metro's big specials that lost money. Running time, 106 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GORGEOUS HUSSY, THE: Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor—More bustles and hoop skirts, with a rumor that Robert Taylor was only in a reel or two, spelled doom for this costume affair. Nobody cares about history, it seems, and when they are not interested how can you get them in. It took a nosedive here and I've read about it in other places. Leo sure can't brag much about this attempt to deliver.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GORGEOUS HUSSY, THE: Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Robert Taylor—Exceptional in many ways. A historical drama, but the title and Metro's advertising on it are more nearly "hysterical" and misleading. This may draw some in who don't want to see it but also will keep the more intelligent people away—those who would gladly see it if they knew what it was like. Not a box office picture for any small town unless its population is well above the average in intelligence. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 19-20.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Co. Farming community patronage.

GREAT ZIEGFELD, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Luise Rainer—No one can complain about the quality or quantity of this big production, but they kept their 35 cents in their pocket and stayed at home or went other places. This is a big picture but no one in the sticks ever heard of Ziegfeld, so they didn't fall for the sales campaign. I'll take a good western next time.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GREAT ZIEGFELD, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Luise Rainer—This is undoubtedly a great picture, but it is too long and we failed to get good atendance at an advanced admission I believe five of the twenty reels should have been eliminated. Running time, 180 minutes. Played December 4-5.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

KELLY THE SECOND: Patsy Kelly, Pert Kelton—This picture got a lot of laughs and when they laugh you know that your patrons are enjoying the picture. Very poor week to gauge the drawing power of any picture, but will do very well on a double bill or bargain night. Played December 21-22.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LONGEST NIGHT, THE: Robert Young, Florence Rice—My patrons wanted to know where I dug up such a picture. It has been cut to 50 minutes—should have been cut 50 more. No excuse for releasing a picture like this whatsoever. I'll bet the Lion is blushing at this opus. It's short enough to keep many from walking out, thank goodness.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

LOVE ON THE RUN: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—Pretty good comedy although somewhat "talky." Crawford wouldn't draw flies without Gable. Played on Christmas and did average holiday business.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

OLD HUTCH: Wallace Beery—Pretty weak story, nothing much to recommend it. Average business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 20-21.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Rural and small town patronage.

OLD HUTCH: Wallace Beery, Cecilia Parker—Nothing wrong with this but the price. It is a good program picture and will do that kind of business. If you can't buy it right, don't play it because it just won't pay out.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

OLD HUTCH: Wallace Beery—A very satisfactory program picture which did a better business than many big specials have done. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 11-12.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

PICCADILLY JIM: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—I don't know where they got this title, but guessed some brother-in-law had to name some of them, so he picked this. It did some business but not enough to pay Metro and me, so I lost. Hope someone makes a New Year's resolution that'll help us boys in the smaller spots.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy—There is not much I can add to the reports from other exhibitors, but this one pleased one hundred per cent. Many thought this Clark's best performance. The earthquake scenes are marvelous. Good story, good music and a fine cast. Running time, 111 minutes. Played November 13-15.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone—Excellent entertainment. A wartime story that held the interest until the last sequence and pleased. Running time, 95 minutes Played November 21-22.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SWORN ENEMY: Robert Young, Florence Rice—Very good melodrama enacted by expert cast. Program business, however, as expected. Played December 23-24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SWORN ENEMY: Robert Young, Florence Rice—A good program picture worth the money, and the trailer is a pip and will get you some business. Drew almost as big a crowd as "Great Ziegfeld," but I'm not bragging. Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan, Edna May Oliver—Earmarked this one a year ago as a perfect show for our Christmas weekend. The few knocks we got from the ranks of the "irrational" were quickly overwhelmed by the applause of those who understood the story and appreciated really marvelous acting. Coleman's "Sydney Carton" was a masterpiece, and the rest of the cast kept pace. The climax, a bit out of the usual type, is the absolute tops in dramatic perfection. This one will never grow obsolete. MGM can, and should, revive it periodically as one of the century's cinema achievements, and as a concrete example of "No greater love hath man than to lay down his life for his brother." Thanks, Leo! Running time, 125 minutes. Played December 25-26.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—Double-billed this one rather late and was surprised at the turnout, but then Myrna Loy is welcome here in any picture whether old or new. Besides all this the picture is undoubtedly of the best. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 17-19.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

WOMEN ARE TROUBLE: Stuart Erwin, Florence Rice—Okay programmer. No drawing strength at box-office, however. Played December 16-17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WOMEN ARE TROUBLE: Stuart Erwin, Florence Rice—It seemed to satisfy as part of a double bill on Saturday. Leo didn't roar very loud. In fact, I think he just opened his mouth at the start of this one. Didn't cost much so can't kick much.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ACCUSING FINGER, THE: Paul Kelly, Marsha Hunt—An attention holder from start to finish. Consistently good programmers from Paramount convince us that it pays to play them. Running time, 62 minutes. Played December 21-24.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby—Very good comedy, music and good singing by all. Not a world beater but it's good. Full of comedy situations and plenty of laughs. Running time, 10 reels. Played December 13-14.—Rudolph Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S.D. Small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1937, THE: Jack Benny, Burns and Allen—Ideal for anyone who wants to laugh and have a good crazy time. Shirley Ross coming along nicely. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 16-17.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Rural and small town patronage.

BORDER FLIGHT: John Howard, Frances Farmer—Average action programmer. Had an exciting finish, but the rest was just so-so. Fair business.—Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

DRIFT FENCE: Larry Crabbe, Tom Keene, Katherine DeMille—A splendid western program, only too short. Takes too many shorts to build up a program to time schedule. Zane Grey's stories are good and I can't see that the producers can't find enough material to make an eight or nine reel show. Running time, six reels. Played December 16.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, THE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll—A fine show but have plenty of comedy alongside. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 25-26.—S. A. Kimball, Sokokis Theatre, Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, THE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll—This is a good show, filled with action and dramatic moments. The grand finale had the audience holding their collective breaths. This is a picture which I would recommend to any manager. Good business.—Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, THE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll—They get better as they come. I have heard a good bit of back biting at this picture but it sure brought them in for me, so why should I say that it is anything but a dandy picture? It is. —Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

GO WEST, YOUNG MAN: Mae West, Randolph Scott, Warren William—Paramount got smart on this one. Mae's name brings them in to a certain extent and the rest of the cast send them out in good humor. Just the same it is a good picture.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

HIDEAWAY GIRL: Shirley Ross, Robert Cummings, Martha Raye—Not a big picture but an entertaining little number that does a lot more business than some of the so-called big ones: Ideal picture for the young trade and will draw quite a bit above average business.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas.

LADY, BE CAREFUL: Lew Ayres, Mary Carlisle—Played this so new the paint on the can was hardly dry. I would call this a dandy better-than-program picture and so will most of you if you run it. Lew Ayres, Mary Carlisle and don't forget Benny Baker.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

LET'S MAKE A MILLION: Edward Everett Horton—It did the trick along with "Trail Dust" (Bill Boyd). Nothing wrong with either one for me. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 28.—S. A. Kimball, Sokokis Theatre, Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

MY AMERICAN WIFE: Francis Lederer, Fred Stone, Ann Sothern—This is a dandy! Will please 99.99 per cent. Fred Stone put this one over, and did a fine job. Interesting story, good photography, good recording and fine acting. Average business.—Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

MY AMERICAN WIFE: Francis Lederer, Ann Sothern—I had a number of patrons tell me that it was one of the best pictures that they had ever seen. Did good business on Bank Night, but believe that it would draw on most any spot.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MY AMERICAN WIFE: Francis Lederer, Ann Sothern—I didn't care for it but the cash customers went for it and called it very good, so I frowned and took their money.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe—The only thing about this picture that resembles the book is the title. It's as much like the "Tale of Two Cities" as Zane Grey's original story. Why put his name to such mediocre stuff. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 17-19.—Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby, Frances Farmer, Bob Burns—If I had it to do over again I would still outgross 75 per cent of the pictures I could buy. You can't go wrong on this one and if you haven't played it yet don't miss making some money for yourself.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

ROSE BOWL: Eleanore Whitney, Tom Brown—Lightweight material made fairly interesting through efforts of a personable group of youngsters, so to speak. Tom Brown fine as usual and Eleanore Whitney attractive. Believe it needs support to help draw the cash customers in, however.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SON COMES HOME, A: Mary Boland, Donald Woods—We thought this a dandy little program picture and so did the few we could get in to see it. It goes to prove that Mary Boland has all of the stuff for a real down-to-earth actress when they give her a break.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER: Ralph Bellamy, Katherine Locke—Another very good program picture. Slow in spots but will hold their interest and send them away with a good taste in their mouths. Did excellent business on Bank Night.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS, THE: Fred MacMurray, Jean Parker, Jack Oakie—Did above average business and pleased the outdoor fans. Would make a swell show for week ends, but will do business on any other spot if you have any western fans or farmer patrons. It pleased everyone that saw it and that is something.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS, THE: Fred MacMurray, Jean Parker—Hand made for any small town and will not only bring them in but will bring their friends. Nuf sed.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

TRAIL DUST: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—It did the trick along with "Let's Make a Million." Nothing wrong with either one for me.—S. A. Kimball, Sokokis Theatre, Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

THREE MARRIED MEN: Lynne Overman, William Frawley—It got by, how I am sure I don't know. Guess it was because I wasn't home at the time and the help didn't have to take it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THREE MARRIED MEN: Lynne Overman, William Frawley—Lack of names in this picture holds this one down, but the title will catch lots of them. Not so hot but have seen lots worse and it got a good many laughs. At least I didn't have to hide behind a telephone post as they came out after the show was over and that is more than you can say about a good many of the so-called pictures.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

WEDDING PRESENT: Joan Bennett, Gary Grant—An insane comedy but we had no complaints. Cast is good and our folks kept interested, so can't kick much even if it did seem a bit exaggerated to us. Guess the producers knew it, though, for they finish with the song "Crazy People" which best describes it. Played December 11-12.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WEDDING PRESENT: Joan Bennett, Cary Grant—Nice show that brought only good comments. Running time, 81 minutes. Played December 22.—S. A. Kimball, Sokokis Theatre, Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

WIVES NEVER KNOW: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—A good comedy along the lines this team usually produces. Plenty of laughs along the way. Played December 9-10.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

YOURS FOR THE ASKING: George Raft, Dolores Costello Barrymore—A cross between a racketeer and comedy but nevertheless very good entertainment regardless what some of them say. Plenty of comedy and plenty of socks in the nose, which is mainly the interest of small town fans.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

Republic

OH, SUSANNA! Gene Autry, Frances Grant—This fellow Autry has become our biggest drawing card for Saturday and this is as good as the rest, if not a little better.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

THREE MESQUITEERS: Robert Livingston, Kay Hughes—If your western fans want a good laugh this one will get it. Better than average.—Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BRIDE WALKS OUT, THE: Gene Raymond, Barbara Stanwyck—Very interesting picture, funny, due to Helen Broderick; absorbing, owing to Gene Raymond, and attractive, attributed to Barbara Stanwyck. Personally I liked the picture. Did average business. —Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

DON'T TURN 'EM LOOSE: Bruce Cabot, Louise Latimer—A very brutal and heartless character is here made the center of action. A lesson on parole board activities that, while effective, is a poor subject for entertainment purposes in general. Played December 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LET'S SING AGAIN: Bobby Breen, Henry Armetta—The story isn't deserving of the actor. Even so, it's a fairly good program picture. Henry Armetta is a swell character actor. The recording wasn't so hot but still music was fine. I'm looking forward to "Rainbow on the River."—Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—This is a pretty good program picture, good especially for a small town. It seems Gene Raymond is gaining in favor both with the producer and the audience. Average business.—Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

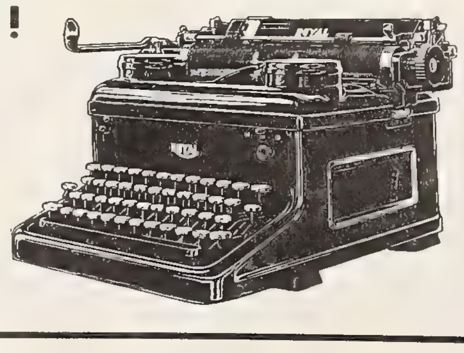
MUMMY'S BOYS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is a dandy. Wheeler and Woolsey are dandies down here, and this is the dandiest of their pictures. Willy Best is a helpmate of the two in their fun-making. It starts up like a murder mystery and ends up with a madman chasing them around in King Pharatine's Haunted Tomb. Good business.—Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

SMARTEST GIRL IN TOWN: Ann Sothern, Gene Raymond—A dandy little picture, but too short. It will please if you can get them in to see it. Our business below average. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 6-8.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

ROYAL—MORE THAN EVER WORLD'S NUMBER ONE TYPEWRITER!

Royal sales for the year 1936 surpassed all others . . . exceeding even 1935, the previous greatest year in Royal history.

ROYAL TYPEWRITER CO., INC.
2 Park Avenue, New York City
Branches and Agencies the World over



SWING TIME: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—I'm afraid Astaire and Rogers are slipping. Nothing to compare with "Top Hat," in my estimation. The audience, however, was well pleased, which is as it should be. Fine recording. Above average business. —Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

TWO IN REVOLT: John Arledge, Warrior, Lightning—This feature is a real honest to goodness program, holds interest from start to finish and has any western backed off the map except Smoky. Give us more of this kind of programs. The title answers the story but is not a drawing title. Running time, eight reels. Played December 18-19.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WTHOUT ORDERS: Sally Eilers, Robert Armstrong—Satisfactory program picture. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 22.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Rural and small town patronage.

YELLOW DUST: Richard Dix—A very good show of the west and Richard Dix plays to perfection. Good for Friday and Saturday. Running time, seven reels. Played December 11-12.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

AMBASSADOR BILL (re-issue): Will Rogers didn't break any records on this repeat. The picture, as such, is okay. Played December 18-19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BACK TO NATURE: Jed Prouty, Spring Byington—Just what the doctor ordered for the other half of that double bill. It seems like my patrons like this series, so guess they have that certain something.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CRIME OF DR. FORBES, THE: Gloria Stuart, Robert Kent—A fairly amusing mystery drama with a different solution. Makes that last feature on the double bill worth watching, if such a thing is possible. Played December 19.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—Far from Shirley's best story and yet the little star makes entertainment out of it. Frank Morgan plays a typical Morgan role to perfection. The producers must take more care however, lest their precious star's luster becomes lost in weak stories. Played December 6-7.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—Who said Shirley was slipping? Boy, she is sliding here. This was the first Temple that didn't do business, and when I paid up, the amount I wrote down was in red ink. Fox and Zanuck will have to shake up the bag of tricks before the rest of her teeth fall out or everybody is sunk.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

15 MAIDEN LANE: Claire Trevor, Cesar Romero—A worthwhile program picture that holds interest nicely. Claire Trevor is certainly a lovely and talented player. Played December 15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KING OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED: Robert Kent, Rosalind Keith—Fair picture. Scenery best part of it, however. Played December 18-19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LADIES IN LOVE: Janet Gaynor, Loretta Young, Constance Bennett, Simone Simon—Too bad such an excellent cast is wasted on a story with only so-so appeal. You will hear complaints from the cash customers and they all blame it on the story or rather lack of story. Played December 13-14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LADIES IN LOVE: Loretta Young, Janet Gaynor, Simone Simon, Constance Bennett—An all talking picture in every sense of the word. Had at least 10 per cent walkouts, which is unusual in a small town. They usually stay on any kind of a picture. A shame to waste this cast on a lot of talk that contains no entertainment at all.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

PEPPER: Jane Withers—Very good. This is one of her best. Suitable on any day of the week. If Twentieth Century-Fox keep on giving this little girl good stories, she is going to be tops some day. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PEPPER: Jane Withers, Irvin S. Cobb—A fair Jane Withers picture. This talented player is being allowed to get smart alecky. Give her a real story and we bet she'd go places We're sorry to hear her next one, "Can This Be Dixie?", is 'way below this one in story value. There must be suitable stories somewhere. Played December 11-12.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple, Alice Faye—Shirley is received very well in our town and this picture seemed to please the entire audience. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 15-16.—Albert Heffernan, Lynx Theatre, Coopersville, Mich. Small town patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple, —A picture which we most welcomed bringing us out of our pre-Christmas slump, and a tonic for the box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RAMONA: Loretta Young, Don Ameche—An otherwise beautiful story is in some measure spoiled by an unnecessarily tragic ending. Color is beautiful and players all splendid. A worthwhile piece of entertainment. Played December 4-5.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RAMONA: Loretta Young, Don Ameche—Truly wonderful color and this story gets the ladies, so the men have to come along, consequently this picture did business. I would advise anyone to run it, extra time, and get that dough you need for the spring outfit.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

REUNION: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—With the quintuplets for advertisement and some good homely connected stories for entertainment, this feature is very satisfactory. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 13-14.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Rural and small town patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Ian Hunter—Despite fine work by an expert cast of players this sentimental story somehow lacked sincerity. At least our folks laughed several times in the wrong places. Ian Hunter was especially fine and did much towards holding together the mushy scenes the leads were forced to play. Played December 2-3.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—A long drawn out and decidedly tiresome picture. Baxter and Loy deserve a better story for they are both excellent, but this one did not please. Running time, 92 minutes. Played November 18-19. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

United Artists

THESE THREE: Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon, Joel McCrea—This is a good picture and pleased 100 per cent. A little old, but did very nice business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 26-28.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

THINGS TO COME: Raymond Massey—Some wondered what this was all about. Others said they'd rather have seen a western, and a very few enjoyed it. Not popular entertainment, however and no box-office draw. Played December 8.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Universal

CRASH DONOVAN: Jack Holt, Nan Gray—Nice litle action picture, but too short. Put plenty of shorts with it. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 15.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

MAN I MARRY, THE: Doris Nolan, Michael Whalen—Good program picture. Pleased 100 per cent. Good family picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 1.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

MY MAN GODFREY: William Powell, Carole Lombard—Was rather disappointed in this one. All I heard was superlatives for it wherever I looked, but didn't think it was so hot myself. Slightly above average business.—Ray LeRoy, Granada Theatre, Port Isabel, Texas. General patronage.

MY MAN GODFREY: William Powell, Carole Lombard—This picture is rather silly in places, but seemed to please most of our patrons. Only average business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 20-21.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

SHOWBOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Paul Robeson, Helen Morgan—Didn't do much business, but it was much better than the one Universal made some time ago. These old costume pictures are hard to sell in a small town and my advice to smaller towns is lay off whenever you can.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SILVER SPURS: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—Not up to the best, but Buck Jones will draw if you can find time to put extra advertising out and push it. We did as good as can be expected with a western picture. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Albert Heffernan, Lynx Theatre, Coopersville, Mich. Small town patronage.

THREE SMART GIRLS: Deanna Durbin, Ray Milland—The hit of the season. Pleased everybody. More favorable comments than any picture played this year. All the cast are good and believe me, this little star Deanna Durbin will go places if given the proper stories. Plenty good show Boost it to the limit, then some. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 24-25.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

TWO IN A CROWD: Joel McCrea, Joan Bennett—Good program picture, not good enough for Sunday date, but will please. Family trade. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 22.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

ANTHONY ADVERSE: Fredric March, Olivia De Havilland—An excellent picture well worth anyone's time and money. Cast and story tops.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BENGAL TIGER, THE: Barton MacLane, June Travis—A good action picture that will put them out on the edge of their seats and please those chewers and spitters in the balcony. Play it instead of a western and put that old tiger out front.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CAIN AND MABEL: Marion Davies, Clark Gable —It'll take more than Clark Gable to put this grandma over. She's washed up, but I just found it out, and back stage stuff is out, with or without Gable. It did fair business but I can't recommend it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE, THE: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—I believe that this is one of the best photographed pictures that I have ever projected and it is probably one of the biggest pictures that anyone filmed, but costume pictures don't do business in small towns, consequently I took a loss on a three day run. If you can get worthwhile terms on this picture, give it a couple of days and really enjoy the marvelous photography.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

BRING 'EM IN DEAD: It took just three wax dummies, one painted truck and three cowboy hats to really do business, but I wanted to be out of town for the next week. What a razzin' I got and what a show. Boys, Barnum was right. Play it just before you leave on your vacation.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ANTS IN THE PANTRY: 3 Stooges—Now if you want slapstick, run these comedies. The only answer to an exhibitor's prayer for comedy and it's not high-class. The farmers just roll in the aisles and that's the truth.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BIRD STUFFER, THE: Krazy Kat Cartoons—A Krazy Kat which was very mediocre.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

CHAMP'S A CHUMP, THE: All Star Comedy—Be sure and play this short subject. A college picture with a championship fight put on in real burlesque style.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FOOTBALL BUGS: Color Rhapsodies—Not as good as others in this series. The grotesque drawing of many of the bugs lessens its value as child entertainment, nor does it increase the adult appreciation any either.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LAUGHING WITH MEDBURY AMONG THE WIDE OPEN FACES: Laughing With Medbury Series—Very unique, giving the high spots and characteristics of different inhabitants. Very educational. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LOONEY BALLOONISTS: Scrappy Cartoons—This Scrappy musical must have been made during the drought, as Scrappy and his partners' music brings rain and happiness to them all. Very good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MAD MONEY: Court of Human Relations—This is the first of the series of Court of Human Relations we have had the privilege of playing. The acting was quite poor, they do not appeal to our audience as much as Voice of Experience.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MOVIE MANIACS: Three Stooges—Another two-reel riot from the Stooges. Maybe they are not high-brow, but our audiences eat 'em alive.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NOVELTY SHOP, THE: Color Rhapsodies—Only fault with this one is its short running time. Otherwise excellent.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PEPPERY SALT, THE: Andy Clyde—Andy Clyde never fails to get a laugh out of our audience and feel this was up to standard.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: No. 8—These Screen Snapshots are always well received.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SHARE THE WEALTH: Andy Clyde—I heard a lot of laughs. Maybe they were laughing in their sleep, but they were laughs, anyway. Something did it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

STARS OF TOMORROW: No. 6—Fair number in this amateur series. A bit old now. The print wasn't so hot.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THRILLS WITH DAREDEVILS: World of Sport Series—This short subject should be popular anywhere. It has some very breath taking scenes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

TOURING THE SPORT WORLD: New World of Sport Series—Excellent sport reel showing some well known and some not so well known sports from many lands.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage

WATER THRILLS: World of Sport Series—A very interesting short subject on different water sports which proved very breath taking.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Educational

BASHFUL BUDDIES: Herman Timberg, Jr., Pat Rooney, Jr.—So so comedy. More dancing, less nonsense would help.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FARMER AL FALFA'S PRIZE PACKAGE: Paul Terry-Toons—Fair cartoon, but since using the colored cartoons, my patrons do not get very enthusiastic about black and white ones. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FEMININE FORM: Treasure Chest—An interesting reel showing some attractive ladies who develop themselves athletically. Good.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HAPPY HEELS: Buster West, Tom Patricola—This comedy should please most anywhere. Slapstick but it gets the laughs. Dance numbers help out.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IT NEVER RAINS: Frolics of Youth Series—One of the best short two-reelers that we have had from Educational for a long, long time. CHICAGO THEATRES FIND RECEIPTS AT HIGH MARK

By Far the Largest Grosses in Years Are Reported for the Weekend in the Loop District

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

Theatres both large and small in this territory found the opening days of the new year most gratifying from a business standpoint. Both in the city and downstate grosses went skyward and the Pre-Christmas slump was forgotten with the arrival of record-breaking crowds.

In Chicago's Loop houses New Year Eve and the following weekend brought the biggest grosses in years. At the Chicago theatre "The Plainsman" headed for a gross expected to near the $60,000 mark, and the length of the show prohibits a fast turnover. The picture will be held over for a second week at least.

At the Palace "That Girl from Paris" was the attraction starting New Year Eve. Two shows were given that evening with all seats reserved and the top price was $2.20. Both shows were sellouts and the business on the days following were of the standout variety. The gross for the Palace, it is estimated, will be well over $36,000. This picture will also be held over for another week. Ethel Waters and a revue were on the stage.

"After the Thin Man," at the United Artists, also was headed for a record run. A short show, with feature, newsreel and cartoon comprising the bill, made for a rapid turnover. Indications pointed to a $30,000 opening week, double the average.

At other Loop theatres, business was exceptional. The Apollo with "Banjo on My Knee" got off to a fast start and was piling up a high figure for the week. The Garrick, with "College Holiday" brought over from the Chicago, was continuing big after a high gross the opening week at the deluxe house. Both the Oriental and State-Lake with stage shows and low admissions found business better than in many months. Playing "B" pictures, these theatres showed much strength regardless.

Numerous big pictures and stage attractions are slated for the Loop in the coming weeks. Holdovers, however, will cause these pictures to open behind release date in most cases, but that is nothing unusual for Chicago.

Following "The Plainsman" at the Chicago will be "One in a Million," which stars Sonja Henie. Theatre executives were trying to arrange for personal appearance of the Scandinavian star in conjunction with the Chicago Tribune's annual Silver Skates tournament the same week. After the skating picture, Veloz and Yolanda, ballroom dancers, are slated to appear in person with "Champagne Waltz" in which they also appear. This dance team played an engagement here last year at the Chicago and set a record.

Fred Waring and his orchestra are also set to play the Chicago very soon and other big name stage attractions are set for this theatre in the coming weeks.

Latest reports from the Chicago Amusement Publicists Association are to the effect that Herb Elisburg, publicity director of Essaness theatres, will serve as president for the coming year. Larry Stein, of Warner, will be vice-president, Harry K. Smythe treasurer, Calvin Hermer secretary, and Sidney Stern, of General Film Laboratories, sergeant-at-arms.

The CAPA clubrooms in the Sherman hotel are being enlarged, refurnished and redecorated.

Irving Mack spent last week in New York arranging for enlargement of his art department, at Filmack Trailer Company.

Eight teams have been organized for the bowling season by Warner Brothers theatres, which have a league of their own. Tom Jones is president, Marcel Brazee treasurer, and Richard Barry secretary.

Board of Education executives announced this week that the leasing of the McVickers theatre probably would be brought up at the January 13th meeting, the next regular session of the board. A recessed meeting this week is not to discuss the matter.

Warner theatre managers in this zone are starting a drive for business beginning February 1st, with $900 in prizes. Wisconsin managers will battle it out for top honors with the Illinois-Indiana managers. E. H. Arkin and Harry Mintz of the local group were in Milwaukee last week arranging plans. A special meeting will be held at Kenosha, Wis., on January 12th.

Walter Brown, Chicago district manager for Ross Federal Service, cancelled plans for a trip through the Midwest this week when his physician advised him to stay home and take care of a severe cold.

Joe Bush, who started working for Balaban and Katz at the old Central Park theatre more than 20 years ago, is leaving Chicago for the West Coast. Bush, now a stagehand at the Chicago theatre, was given a farewell luncheon at the Covenant Club last week with B. & K. executives and other theatrical leaders in attendance.

For the fifth year the American Can Company will play hosts to the National Canners Association at their annual convention here, by treating the delegates to a free show at the Chicago theatre January 21st. The can company buys out the theatre for one evening every year and presents a stage and screen show for the guests.

Hays Tells Envoy Pact Pleases U.S.

An expression of the motion picture industry's satisfaction with the new trade agreement governing imports and financial regulations in Italy was made in Washington last weekend by Will H. Hays to Fulvio Suvich, Italian ambassador to the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Hays attended the President's diplomatic reception at the White House on Saturday night.

American distributors have now resumed operations in Italy, following official announcement in Rome of the new film regulations which allow for the export of 20,000,000 lire annually and fix a quota of American pictures at 250.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"If You Feel Like a Heel—There's Hope"

Seems that one of the members, a very nice sort of guy but not very active in reporting his campaigns, was in to pay a New Year's call. While here, he read over some of the swell things published, in last week's section and in this, from industry top names and theatremen on the Quigley Awards and also the Round Table.

The visiting brother studied these for a bit, then spoke up thusly:

"You know, Mike, when I realize that I get so much of real value from the Round Table pages each week and contribute so little in return—I feel like a heel."

At which your Chairman returned:

"Well, kid, if you really feel like a heel for not doing your share, then I guess there's hope."

Yes, sir, friends, there sure is some hope for the guy who knows deep down in his soul he is ducking his very obvious duty in maintaining the strength and purposes of the Round Table—his own and only medium in the business that gives two whoops in a hogshead about the manager. The lad who feels guilty will snap out of it, sooner or later.

But we'll be a flat-footed angle-worm if we can figure out how to arouse those fellows who dip into the Round Table week in and week out, take it for granted there will be ideas of merit to feed their boxoffices contributed by other members but are entirely indifferent to any suggestion that they are expected to forward details of their campaigns in exchange.

In other words, folks, they take but don't give.

And now, while we're on the subject, let's go a bit deeper into the matter and talk a little turkey.

Your Round Table is nothing else than a theatreman's organization that grew and became vital because, voluntarily and enthusiastically, it was fed and nourished by the man in the field. No one was ever forced to join up. No one ever said a manager had to sign up—or else.

There must be a need for an association of this kind, for if not then why are there over 5,000 names on the books from all over the world from men who applied for membership strictly on their own and who did so because they figured that this "weekly meeting place"—this "clearing house of boxoffice ideas for managers"—was something through which they could better their theatres and, by the same token, their jobs.

With this in mind, the men who realized the lasting value of a Round Table for theatremen set themselves to report at not too infrequent intervals how they put over this picture, that holiday, those drives. Others, profiting by such contributing, joined in and did likewise—and there's your story, or at least the start of it.

The other part of the tale has to do with those members who evidently feel that by signing the membership application blank they are entitled to every idea and suggestion from the boys who are regular contributors, without doing a blessed thing in return.

Yes, we know all about those lads who are just honing to be more active were their bosses not agin' these activities. We also know about the men in situations which they claim allows them no opportunity to send in anything of value.

But we also know about those theatremen in good spots who are given latitude to put over their attractions and are also encouraged to report their campaigns to the Round Table—but simply don't. And among these laddies there are plenty who go through the pages week after week and wash out a lot of "pay dirt."

The Round Table is only what the members want it to be. Its strength comes from the man in the field who takes seriously his voluntary obligations of membership; its weaknesses from the other kind of gent who dips into the meat barrel and does nothing to furnish his share of boxoffice rations.

SHOULD BE DONE NATIONALLY

An enlightening article, that from Eddie Mayer set down on a following page, detailing activities of the RKO Cincinnati theatres student school for managers. Results already obtained show this patient and intelligent tutoring is developing sound managerial manpower from the ranks.

So far the graduates promoted to assistant manager posts are clicking in a manner that should by all means interest other circuits in the same fine method of schooling. For the good of the industry, it's an operation that could be carried out nationally.

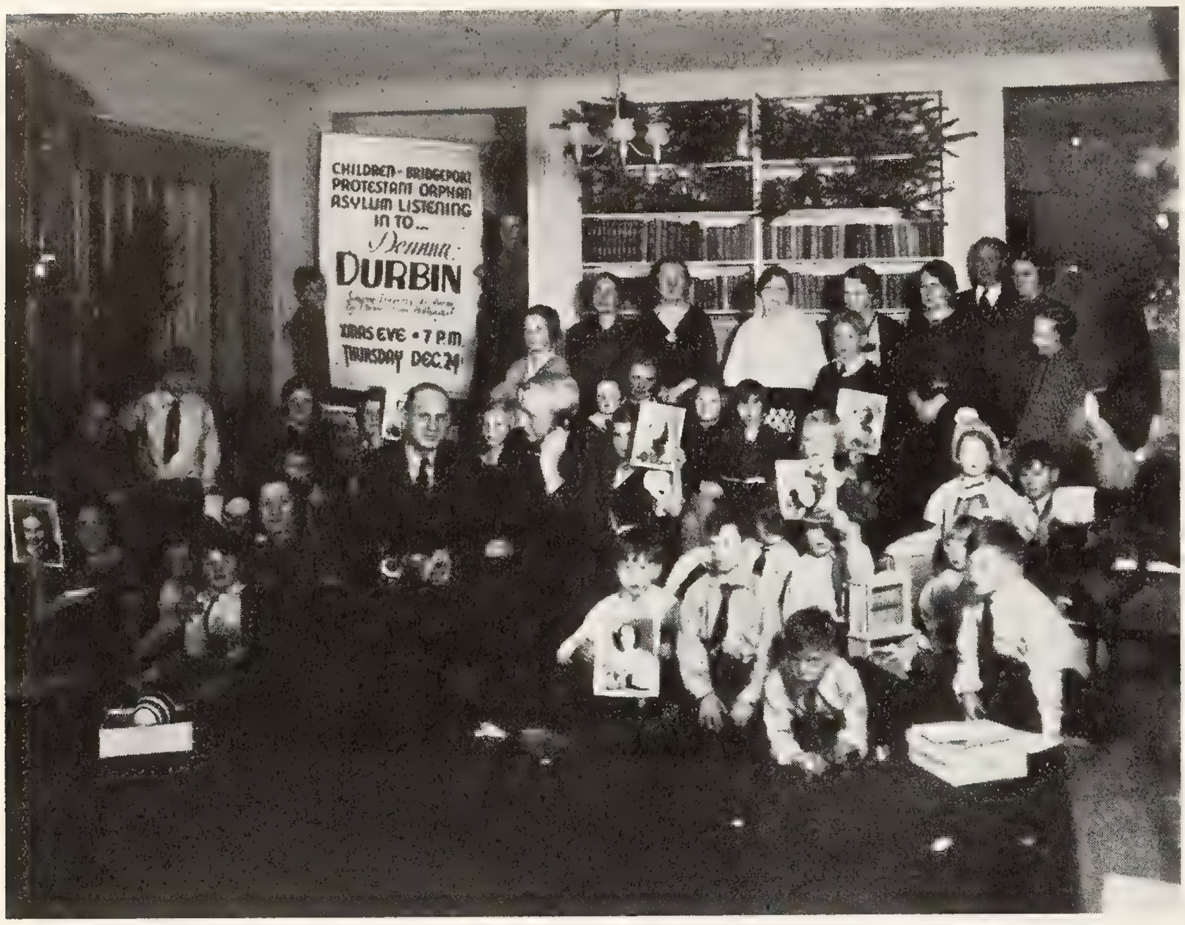
Star Sings Carols Via Telephone On 'Smart Girls' Date



CHILDREN - BRIDGEPORT PROTESTANT ORPHAN ASYLUM LISTENING IN TO...
Deanna
DURBIN
XMAS EVE • 7 P.M.
THURSDAY DEC. 24

BRIDGEPORT CHILDREN LISTEN AS STAR SINGS FROM HOLLYWOOD

Of course, Santa Claus was on hand at the Bridgeport, Conn., Protestant Orphan Asylum, but the celebration for the youngsters started on Christmas Eve and in a most unusual manner with Deanna Durbin singing carols to the children from Hollywood as part of the Yuletide activities.

It came about through the good offices of Morris Rosenthal, skipper of Loew's-Majestic, who conceived the idea of having Universal's new 14-year-old star opening at the theatre the next day in "Three Smart Girls," entertaining the children in this manner with the aid of the local phone company, which arranged the coast-to-coast connection between the orphans' home and the studios. The call was put through by Rosy and two minutes later through an amplifier hooked onto the phone by a special control box, the children heard the season's geetings from the star, who sang "Silent Night" and other seasonal selections.

The Loew-man then introduced former Mayor Buckingham to Miss Durbin and the executive on behalf of the city and state expressed appreciation to the star for the entertainment. Rosenthal closed the proceedings with his thanks and greetings.

Bridgeport dailies went for the tiein with lots of publicity and shots of the ceremony and in every case mentioned prominently that Deanna Durbin was the star of "Three Smart Girls," which opened at the Majestic on Christmas Day. Reproduced on this page is one of the photos run in the papers and shows Mr. Buckingham with phone to ear, and Rosenthal and Mrs. Rosenthal, who play host to the children, immediately to the right of the former mayor.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Gross and Pantages Splurge On "Three Girls" Date

Jack Gross and Rodney Pantages, managers respectively of the Hillstreet and Pantages Theatres, Los Angeles, topped off their all around outstanding campaign for "The Three Smart Girls" dual run with a newspaper splurge that dominated the pages. Ads, ranging in size from one column by thirteen inches to three columns by seventeen inches, for days before the opening, hailed Deanna Durbin's first screen appearance. Supplementing the amusement page ad smashes were a number of big cooperative ad breaks which resulted from local tieups. Hundreds of special six sheets, three sheets and window cards were posted. These played up Deanna Durbin as Eddie Cantor's sensational songbird.

Following the pressbook suggestion, both theatres made up large compo-board hearts on which patrons signed their names and addresses and in return received an autographed photo of, "The new sweetheart of the screen." Marc Lachman and Ben Westland, Universal exploiteers, assisted.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Newspaper Contests Sell "Love on the Run"

Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, tied up the Toledo Blade and Elks for ten days, whereby wearing apparel for city needy was accepted in lieu of admission ticket for performance of "Love on the Run." Each story carried two-column head with art of Crawford, Gable and Tone and playdates.

Another six-day contest was planted with readers invited to fill in the phrase, the middle words of which were "on the" as in the picture title. For example, "Bowling on the Green." Guest tickets were awarded best answers, all installments carried full credit for stars, picture, etc., etc.

Santa Claus Does Honors At Sandefur's Party

Over 35 merchants in Winchester, Ky., cooperated with Manager W. A. Sandefur, of the Leeds and Colonial Theatres, furnishing the gifts distributed to patrons at the annual Christmas party. Santa, himself, in costume, gave the prizes from the stage and for convenience in naming the winners, p.a. system was installed by radio distributor who furnished new eight-tube model at special discount for the top prize. Coupons for the drawing were given by merchants and lobby display created.

Sandefur also forwards photo of shadow box he installed recently to fill a dark corner of his foyer. Design is modernistic with space for regular accessories and the shot reproduced illustrates 22 by 28 and 14 by 17's on "Polo Joe."

Crites Promoted Editorial On "White Angel" Date

Selling "White Angel" to the editor of his local paper as a picture of historical interest and significance, Arlie Crites was able to promote an editorial for the date at the Rig, in Borger, Texas. Editorial gave direct plug with theatre credits and urged that school children and adults attend.

White ensemble in style shop window was tied in to date with copy "as lovely as Kay Francis in," etc., Cashiers and other girl personnel were attired in nurses' uniforms with small bands across caps lettered with the title. Red Cross equipment and banners were used in the advance lobby and imprinted napkins distributed in local restaurants.

"Othello" and "Desperado"

With Walter Huston in "Othello" in Albany, Andy Roy, at the Strand figured the audience just about right for a plug on his date for "Gay Desperado" by inserting full page slip sheets in the program printed for the Shakespeare epic at the legitimate house. House did capacity with just the type of audience patrons he was angling for.

I deem it a privilege and a pleasure to accept your invitation to serve as a Judge in the Quigley Awards for the coming year.

You are familiar with the spread of our circuit from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. Through this far-flung territory our managers unanimously vote the MOTION PICTURE HERALD the most important trade publication they receive. The multiplicity and variety of information is invaluable and the Managers' Round Table Club inspires activity because it gives them a chance to receive national publicity they could not receive through any other medium.

This is to advise that I will be very happy to serve as a Judge on the 1937 Committee for the Quigley Awards.

It would seem to me that the Quigley Award is a very important institution in stimulating the efforts of the managers and exploitation men in the field. It has a very definite place in our business. . . Have talked to some of the boys who have won the Award and some who have tried and been unsuccessful and I know they all have a great desire to possess a Plaque.

In view of the fine work you are doing, I will be glad to co-operate and serve on the Committee for the 1937 Quigley Awards and do whatever I can to help.

Many thanks for your very kind letter inviting me to serve as a Judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1937. I am happy to accept.

I regret that because of the various problems involving the receivership of our theatres this last year, I was not able to serve as competently as I wished. This coming year, however, it is my purpose to help to a greater extent.

Here in New England we recognize your publication as a valuable stimulant to all showmen, and I sincerely feel that it has done much to further the efforts of the man in the field.

I am very happy to reaccept the reappointment on the Quigley Awards Competition Committee for 1937.

I consider the Quigley Awards as a great stimulant to the managers which reacts at the box office to the benefit of the theatre owners because of the extra efforts put forth by the managers in an endeavor to win recognition from the Committee.

The Quigley Awards Competition is similar to the All-American Football Selection for it brings out the best efforts of those men in our industry who are interested in their work.

It justifies its entrants by impartial awards made by a representative group of judges. This results in a constant improvement and a striving toward perfection.

Having already expressed my high regard for the Quigley Awards, it is only natural that I should, and do, deem it an honor to serve as a judge.

GEORGE W. TRENDLE

President

United Detroit Theatres Corp.

I will be delighted to serve as a Judge on your Committee for 1937.

In my opinion the Quigley Awards serve as a great stimulus to the managers in the field who eagerly watch the trade papers for unusual campaigns and exploitation methods. Those who are a bit slow in figuring out new methods for themselves gain a lot from the reports of the Quigley Competition; those who are bright and alert are stimulated with the thought that they may win the prize.

NAT WOLF

Warner Theatres, Cleveland Zone

In my estimation, the Quigley Awards idea has created a great competitive spirit among our managers, which must necessarily reflect itself at the boxoffice of our theatres throughout the zone. One outstanding feature is the keen rivalry noticed for supremacy in the race, even for Honorable Mention.

When Quigley campaigns are published, a manager in a small town with limited possibilities of getting ideas from his competitors, learns of the methods used by theatres in other cities and by changing these ideas around he can adapt them for local uses. In this manner he stimulates interest in his local merchandising schemes.

I feel the Quigley Competitions are worth all and more than they cost—whatever they cost. They not only stimulate us men in the field but reports of the winning campaigns are undoubtedly 'The Cream of the Crop' and from same one can get many worthwhile ideas.

SID BLUMENSTOCK

Adv. Mgr., Warner Theatres

May I say that I believe the Quigley Awards provide the necessary incentive to do the job just a little bit better. They create a competitive spirit among us and in seeing what the other fellow is doing, help us to formulate better advertising and exploitation campaigns for our pictures.

FRANK BOUCHER

Manager, Warner's Metropolitan

The Quigley Awards was the best step forward our industry has taken since the advent of sound. While I have not been fortunate enough to win an Award I have won several honorable mentions, of which I am very proud.

The Quigley Awards have been an inspiration to all real showmen—and the results have justified such commendation in the box office receipts.

JACK BRAUNAGEL

Dist. Mgr., Intermountain Theatres

Denver, Colo.

I feel the Quigley Awards give every manager that extra something to shoot at when he is working on a campaign. Naturally, anyone who puts in that extra push will help the boxoffice just as it helped our boxoffice on the campaign that we put on for "And Sudden Death." May the Quigley Awards continue as successfully as they have in the past.

LOUIE CHARNINSKY

Manager, Capitol, Rialto

Dallas, Texas.

Quigley Competitions are a great stimulant to the box office as they create a high standard of competition. In my own words I can only say, that Competition Necessitates the Way For the Invention of New Ideas.

I owe much to the Quigley Plaque and Honorable Mentions that I have been fortunate enough to win; as I am quite sure that the winning of these awards did much in placing me in my present position as manager of two downtown houses.

MEN IN THE FIELD GIVE THEIR OPINIONS

On these two pages (more in next issue) are set down some of the nice things theatremen have to say about the Quigley Awards; what they mean to the boxoffice and how they react upon the fortunes of the man in the field. These statements have come from showmen who have won Plaques, First or Honorable Mentions during 1936 which in many instances have resulted directly in advancement to better jobs or enhancement of personal prestige.

MARLOWE CONNER

Manager, Grove

Any incentive that tends to spur on a man's efforts to do something a little better than he has ever done before or to outdo his fellowman in a friendly way, is worth while and will consequently reflect favorably at the boxoffice.

The Quigley Awards have that kind of incentive.

BEN M. COHEN

Manager, Loew's College

New Haven, Conn.

Striving for a Quigley Award is undoubtedly a help or stimulation for exploitation efforts. In securing a managing editor's Okay for a stunt, I used the line:

"It would help me to win a Quigley Award if you could plant this stunt."

SID DANNENBERG

I sincerely believe that the desire to win a Quigley Award is a decided stimulus toward bigger and better publicity campaigns, which in turn result in bigger box office grosses. . . .

P. S.—I'm still trying to win a Plaque.

TED EMERSON

Manager, Paramount

No question in my mind as to value of Quigley competitions as an aid to better box office grosses. I watch them very closely and get many good ideas for our campaigns here.

As to improving my own situation, well I have received advances during the past year and along with them tougher assignments and frankly I like it.

SETH H. FIELD

University Theatre

Cambridge Mass.

The Quigley Award competition has always been a grand idea in every theatre man's mind—but to those fortunate managers who have actually won a plaque, its worth is even more evident. Many of us can thank the Quigley Awards, either directly or indirectly, for the better positions we now hold. It is an exploitation stimulus second to none. As for increasing box-office grosses—in my two years at Ellsworth, Maine, only one picture out-grossed the film on which I directed my winning campaign. And I'd give my right arm to win one of the Grand Awards!

ARNOLD N. GATES

Manager, Loew's Park,

Cleveland, Ohio

Any promotion that sets up competition for the manager is helpful, not only to him, but to his theatre, and of course the product he plays. Therefore, I say, long may those Plaques, First and Honorable Mentions, wave, over the heads of managers. They have become a part of the business and, in my opinion, play an important part in every campaign executed.

MORT GOODMAN

Publicist

Warner Cleveland Theatres

It has been proven that many a mediocre picture can be skyrocketed to top grosses through ingenious exploitation. Reading of the unique stunts being executed daily by clever showmen the country over has inspired me to scratch even harder to keep up with the parade.

There is no question but what recognition in the form of a Quigley Award is also conducive—if not at once, eventually—in improving a person's position in the industry.

HAL GRADY

Manager, Palace

I have never been disappointed in any gross done on the pictures which we sold while participating in the Quigley Awards contests. The resultant grosses were extremely gratifying. I believe that the Quigley Awards have done a great deal toward stimulating more active exploitation and naturally the box office is going to reflect this extra salesmanship in increased grosses.

As long as I remember, managers have been asking for recognition. The Quigley Competitions, through your active leadership, have given the answer. Whether we have come in first or last, the fact that we tried, did definitely help the box office, as well as our own standing.

BILL HENDRICKS

Manager, Warner's

I think the Quigley Awards have done more than Barnum to advance the cause of showmanship. Exploitation has made tremendous strides in the past several years because of the inspiration that the Awards have afforded for recognition of outstanding show-selling and boxoffice grosses are naturally stimulated and often depend upon sensible merchandising of attractions—isn't that so?

SID S. HOLLAND

City Mgr., Elhart Amuse., Co.

I do not think there is any doubt in the minds of exhibitors everywhere that the Quigley Award is a boxoffice stimulus. In addition to having cashed in at the boxoffice, I have had personal recognition from my successful participation in the Awards.

GEORGE LIMERICK

Manager, Yale, Palace
Cleburne, Texas

I can truthfully say that the box office was certainly stimulated by the Campaign which I presented to you and which in turn won the September Quigley Bronze. I can also say that from a standpoint of prestige I received locally it was certainly worth the effort which I put out. The Quigley Awards are OK and I personally think they have in the past and will in the future be a criterion for all showmen.

MORT MARGOLIUS

Manager College
Toronto, Canada

I don't want to go sounding off, cause I'm still a pretty green guy at show business, but re Quigley Awards, I'd like to go on record as saying, it gives a fellow that extra something to shoot at. As a red-blooded competition for managers, it offers escape from a constant rut, an opportunity to turn the spotlight on his own thinking powers. It's a swell X-ray of who's really selling seats, and who is just going through the motions. I found out a long, long time ago, that the Big Bosses, who are a helluva lot smarter than little guys like me, check on just such publicising mediums as the Awards and the Club constantly for this very revealing value.

"GRAND AND GLORIOUS TIME AWAITS WINNERS"

The motion picture industry is fortunate in having such a stimulant as the Quigley Awards. Any institution or objective which puts pep into the mental processes of managers and puts a fighting edge on showmen who want to demonstrate their stuff, is bound to have a beneficial effect on the box office, thereby benefitting not only the theatres, but also the producers.

With the goal of a week's entertainment in Hollywood dangling before him as one of the Grand Awards of the year, I don't see how any showman can fail to do his utmost to win it.

Having been the guest of the Quigley organization in last year's hike around Hollywood, I can assure all and sundry, a grand and glorious time awaits the winners. — HARRY GOLDBERG, Director of Advertising and Publicity, Warner Bros. Theatres.

KEN MEAD

Manager, Main
Pueblo, Colo.

It is a well known fact that competition, whether between rival factions or within a separate organization, is an excellent stimulator. Inasmuch as entries for the Quigley Awards are judged on the basis of effective exploitation and not merely eye-wash, we take time to ask ourselves just what the value of the campaign will be in respect to the boxoffice. In so doing we are not only giving ourselves a better chance to win one of the coveted Awards but also are able to see the receipts mount.

B. F. ("DINTY") MOORE

Warner Metropolitan Theatres
New York City

You are to be congratulated upon your sincerity of purpose and results obtained from the Quigley Awards. It is apparent that competition in competing for Awards is "keen," and one's integrity is compensated when he receives recognition, through your column, in such a vast field of endeavor.

BEN W. NEWMAN

Manager, Loew's Rio
New York City

The week this house put on the campaign which was entered in the Quigley Awards turned out to be one of the best in gross of the year and I am certain the campaign helped greatly. My winning an Award stimulated other men I know to go after one of the plaques.

LES POLLOCK

Manager, Loew's
Rochester, N. Y.

I find one always puts his best efforts forth when working for some incentive, and naturally, everyone strives for recognition—Quigley Awards offer you both.

DWIGHT SEYMOUR

Manager, Dunkin

I think Quigley Competitions are beneficial in acquainting those appendant to it with more and varied ideas on exploitation as well as means of arousing box-office interest.

CHAS. ("CHUCK") SHANNON

Manager, Warners' Belmar
Pittsburgh, Pa.

I stand firmly behind my contention that the campaigning on pictures for the Quigley Competitions brought about a definite stimulant to better boxoffice grosses. I also believe that it was responsible for improving my situation and feel that it has given me a great opportunity, as a Junior Manager, to prove my capability in upholding a confidence placed in me in this capacity.

JOE ROSENFIELD

Manager, Mojeska
Milwaukee, Wis.

Although I have only won Honorable Mention in the Quigley Awards, I consider it a great privilege to have participated with all the great showmen throughout the world. I am sure the efforts extended in these contests represent the acme of showmanship. Yours for bigger and better campaigns.

NATHAN SILVER

Manager, Strand
Lowell, Mass.

The fact, that I have for the past three years been a recipient of Honorable Mention in the Quigley Competitions, speaks for itself, as to my personal feelings, of the worth of the Quigley Awards.

The trading of ideas through the medium of the Manager's Round Table, is through it's very conception, destined to keep showmen, who are not too proud to learn a new sales promotional angle, on their toes and up to date in the selling of their merchandise. And the awards offered through the medium of Quigley Publications, are an added incentive to all to "Shoot The Works" in the hope of winning the muchly coveted Quigley Plaque.

In brief, The Quigley Awards, won through our own individual initiative, merit and effort, based on the opinions of the judges, who represent the leaders in our industry is in effect a recommendation from such leaders, which every theatre manager should strive to earn, as it is tantamount to a personal tribute to our worth as Showmen and exploiteers from the very men who have already through their own success attained a goal to which we are all striving—The Top.

Artist Paints "Rembrandt" In Brown's Mezzanine Show

By tiein with the Rhode Island School of Design, in Providence, Bill Brown was able to borrow a number of paintings for exhibit in the mezzanine lounge as a buildup for his date on "Rembrandt." In addition to the pictures Brown had an artist from the school on hand to do a bit of fancy daubing for the customers.

Artist worked two hours in the afternoon and about the same period in the evening fashioning an oil of the famed painter. Exhibit was plugged in the newspapers and also among the people in town, Bill stressing the importance of the date especially to those folks who are picture-conscious.

Author Makes Appearance For Saunders on "Anthony"

The thrill of a lifetime, it was, says Manager James N. Saunders when he was able to persuade Hervey Allen, the author of "Anthony Adverse," resident in that sector, to appear personally on the stage of the Avalon, in Easton, Md., in connection with the showing of the picture. The famed author spoke of the book and the picture, the event being publicized in the local press.

In keeping with the buildup, Saunders constructed front with the title in raised letters, built up of cardboard with facings of beaten brass decorative paper (see photo). Merchant tieups, p.a. system on delivery truck and poster on the Allen appearance out front were other angles that were used.

Rosen, Martin Report Various Promotions

So pleased was the cooperating merchant with a tiein ad promoted on "Theodora Goes Wild" by Vic Rosen and Dave Martin, at the Warner-Granada, Santa Barbara, Cal., that he was prevailed upon to give one of the gas ranges advertised to the boys to be awarded at the last performance of the date.

On "Devil Is A Sissy," the boys broke out with a small throwaway distributed around town which was headed "The Devil You Say" and followed by Webster's definition of a resident from Hades. This was tied in neatly to the picture. Lacking a suitable devil cut and not being able to find one in the exchange or locally, a series of medieval bird dragons was rounded up for decoration. The boys felt at least the dragons coincided with one of Webster's definitions: "a creature of malignant temper or appearance."

Then topping their Christmas activities, Vic and Dave went out and promoted themselves a $1,250 grand piano for a giveaway on Christmas Eve. They decided on this rather than a flock of small gifts and were able to obtain the unusual gift in exchange for the coupons, displays and trailer. Music company paid for cards, heralds and newspaper ads and supplied a hand-painted Chickering which was displayed in the lobby (see photo).

Ticket-Selling Contest Spurs "Romeo" Campaign

The solid advance of the roadshow date on "Romeo and Juliet" at the Strand, York, Pa., put on by Manager Paul J. Harvey, at the Strand, York, Pa., was further stimulated by a ticket-selling contest organized by the house staff and personnel in other of the houses in that Warner district. Cash was given for the best records made in York and a further prize to the employee in the outside theatres. To aid the latter, reservation trailers were run in the nine district houses.

With the president of the local better films council as chairman, sponsors for the date were selected from among prominent citizens, members of the clergy, etc. Letters carrying this list and including reservation blanks were found effective. Featured in the drive was a series of personal talks on the picture made by Harry Goldberg, Warner Theatres ad head, before various school and college student bodies. Matinees were set back so that local students could arrange to attend.

Tiein was made for display of Juliet engagement rings, sponsor advertising these in local paper. Mirrors and lighters named after the title were presented to patrons. In addition to the oil paintings used in the lobby local book store gave main window to Shakespeare's works featuring special editions. Showing included oil painting, scene stills and theatre copy.

Beard Growing Contest Used for "Road to Glory"

Three weeks in advance of his showing of "Road to Glory," Happy Hasselo, Royal Theatre, LeMars, Iowa, spotted ads in his newspapers offering cash prizes to those men who succeeded in growing a beard resembling the Van Dyck worn by Lionel Barrymore in the picture. Paper came through with some neat breaks including photos of the winners. Happy says there were 12 contestants and he, too, employed the hirsute adornment during the date. Incidentally, he also made arrangements to have the winners shaved free of charge.

Through tieup with telephone company, splitting 50-50, Happy called all farmers, telling them about the opus and he says it looked like old home week when they finally all arrived at the theatre. An improvised dugout was erected in the foyer at which usher was stationed next to telephone.

School for Student Managers Sponsored by RKO Midwest

Members of Personnel Trained by Joe Goetz to Fill Assistant Manager Posts

by E. H. MAYER

in Cincinnati

Youth must be served. So must RKO. These two essentials, focused in close perspective in the eyes of Joe Goetz, assistant division manager of the RKO Midwest, Cincinnati, have crystallized into an actuality — a school for student managers. Thus there came into existence in February, 1935, a school of this type, which, for method of operation, curricula and definite results is believed to differ radically from any of the number of other schools with similar objective now functioning in various key situations throughout the country. Goetz, although still a young man—he is not yet 30—numbers among his other important executive duties that of booker for the Midwest division, president of the Cincinnati Bookers' Club, box-office checker and sundry other duties connected with modern theatre routine. He, himself, has "come up through the ranks" from a part-time usher while attending school in his home-town of Dayton, Ohio, and is thus admirably qualified to effectively transmit the enthusiasm and fundamental knowledge of theatre operation in all its various ramifications to the young men under his personal supervision who are aspiring to greater things. The school has the effect of proving the mettle of potential managerial timber long before the position actually is assumed, thus obviating disappointment and the attendant unpleasantness on both sides if the appointee should, perchance, subsequently be found unqualified for the responsibility.

JOE GOETZ

JOE GOETZ AND STUDENT MANAGERS' CLASS IN SESSION

Class Meets Each Wednesday

The class, with an average enrollment of 14 students, meets each Wednesday in the RKO Palace Theatre, in which building, incidentally, the division office is located. Each of the Cincinnati managers selects a chief of staff as a student. The RKO Albee—the flagship of the Cincinnati chain—assigns two students. The study book method has no place in the scheme of things. Instead, modern school system and technique are employed. The students acquire their knowledge by actual experience through practical application of the sundry factors which go to make up managerial and executive procedure.

One subject each week is thoroughly explained, and sometimes demonstrated, in the minutest detail by a speaker who is considered an authority on the subject in question. The subjects cover organization, personnel, accounting, banking, box-office statements, advertising and exploitation, schedules, theatre fronts and lobbies, booking, stage shows, projection and so on. Following these weekly talks and discussions, at which the students are invited to ask questions without limit, they are required, under supervision of the assistant manager of their theatre, to constantly study at close range and obtain first-hand information through actual contact, everything worthwhile about the subject or department under discussion. They are what might be termed, for the purpose of clarity, virtually in active charge of the department for the week, without, of course, assuming any of the responsibility.

The following week the students are required to read in class a paper which they have prepared as a result of the intensive study. In these papers they outline their individual reactions, and make suggestions, if desired, looking toward the betterment in operation of the department. These theses tend to act as an index as to the mental alertness of the student, and his ability to grasp and absorb the fundamentals. In any case, however, where the paper indicates a sub-normal conception of the subject, that particular student is made to "stay after school," as it were, which means that he is given special coaching and "nursed along" both by Goetz and his fellow students until he is as proficient as his classmates. The ways and wherefores of every department of theatre operation and its related subjects must be thoroughly understood in every detail, regardless of the length of time necessary to accomplish this objective, before he is allowed to proceed to his next subject.

The RKO Orpheum—a close-in suburban theatre, which operates only in the evenings—the latest addition to the circuit's Cincinnati chain, is the final "proving ground" when the student becomes sufficiently proficient to be placed "on his own." At this stage, the student is made assistant manager of the Orpheum, where his academic knowledge may be put into more constructive and productive practice. If he proves his fitness at the Orpheum—the starting point in his upward ascendency—and so far, no student has failed—he is promoted to the post of assistant manager at one of the "main line" houses when a vacancy occurs, and the next eligible student is assigned to the Orpheum. In this succession there occurs an opening in the school which is filled by the next chief of staff selected for enrollment by one of the local managers. When vacancies do not occur at the "main line" houses for long intervals, the students continue in school, reviewing the subjects and acquiring new ideas promulgated by the speakers and through the medium of observation. Some of the ideas and suggestions advanced by the embryonic managers are particularly ingenious, original and noteworthy. Not a few of them have been put into practice in the Cincinnati theatres.

Several Students Promoted

Since the school was opened less than two years ago, several students have been made assistant managers as enumerated later in this article. There has, however, been one exception to the student traveling via the Orpheum route, namely, Berman Richey, who went directly from the school to assistant manager of the RKO Shubert, a large downtown house playing stage shows and pictures. Within the past few months, this same young man was again promoted, this time to manager of the Nordland, a prominent neighborhood house in the Lisson-White chain, which, on account of certain local setups that, for the purpose of this article, need not be dwelt upon, is permitted to draw upon the supply of RKO potential managers without violating any of the ethics of the industry.

Roy Ferndon, starting as chief of service at the RKO Capitol, was promoted to assistant manager of the RKO Grand, and subsequently to the same post at the RKO Lyric, a house in the higher admission brackets. Earl Taffe, an attache of the RKO Albee, was made assistant manager of the RKO Lyric, and later transferred to the RKO Shubert as assistant to Cliff Boyd in charge of that house. Cyril Dabbelt, erstwhile chief of service at the RKO Lyric, now is assistant manager of the RKO Grand. All of these boys, with the exception noted, were stationed at the Orpheum.

Quite frequently the class has the opportunity of hearing an outstanding authority whose activities are outside the realm of the theatre, but who has a message which might well be a part of every theatre manager's stock of knowledge. For instance, within the past few weeks the speaker was Don Nimo, of the Cincinnati chapter of the Red Cross, who explained, and subsequently vividly demonstrated the procedure to follow in emergencies such as first aid in heart attack, epilepsy, fainting, hysteria, etc.

Blumberg Addresses Students

The students also were addressed quite recently by Nate J. Blumberg, New York, general manager of theatre operation for RKO. Blumberg pointed out that New York was closely watching the progress of this school, and stressed the fact that here was being offered a real opportunity which relatively few were privileged to enjoy under such capable leadership. He told the boys that they were being most thoroughly grounded in those important essentials which form the solid foundation of every successful manager and executive, upon which foundation they had a wonderful opportunity to build a highly successful future, which was entirely in their hands.

Goetz takes a personal pride and interest in each of the students, and is ever on the alert to help them both in school and in the field.

Dimes for Christmas

Suggested by Dinny Dinerman, RKO Midwest Theatres ad head, the Cincinnati Post put out a lot of dime containers and ran a lot of shots of local prominents with the containers to plug the coin collection for the paper's Christmas fund. Dime displays were used in other ways to increase interest in the welfare project.

AN EFFECTIVE IDEA FOR MAILING LISTS

For complete and inexpensive mailing coverage, Ben Cohen, College, New Haven, finds effective a mimeographed letter folded in three and held together with a pre-canceled penny stamp which is postage enough to get the letter through the mails. Addressed on the reverse side, the mailing piece looks like a folder-letter and used most recently to doctors and nurses on "Reunion". Went over so well, that Ben is doing it again on "Gay Desperado" to the local concert hall mailing list.

"Rembrandt" Novelization Planted in Newspapers

A special 15-page novelization of "Rembrandt," based on the life of the famous painter, has been planted as a circulation builder by United Artists in 12 of the country's leading newspapers.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, the first paper to carry the feature in addition to using half and quarter-page ads daily for several days before the supplement appeared, plastered the town with 24-sheets, bannered its fleet of trucks and used local radio stations. Similar plans have been laid in the other cities where the novelization will be used.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Two-Color Co-op Page

Created by C. C. Cassady, Zaring's Egyptian Theatre, Indianapolis, was this charcoal poster of Charles Laughton, done in black and white for his lobby display.

Ohioan Stresses Need of Regular Drills for Fire

by EDDIE MILLER

Manager, Warners' Hippodrome, Cleveland

A cry pierces the quietness of the auditorium . . . a frantic mother screams. The sight of a small blaze throws the audience into a panic. Men, women and children are all breaking for the exits to find that it is impossible to work the panic bolt! Ushers and other theatre attaches, too, are running here and there, in great confusion, intensifying the pandemonium already existing.

A scene like the one above might well happen in a theatre where the staff is improperly trained to handle an emergency. But such a nightmare need not happen!

You must train every member of your personnel!

First of all, you must have a "set" signal to notify your staff that there is trouble.

Secondly, your men must pass on the word without letting the audience in on it! Have each man assigned to a particular door. Another to go to the fire extinguisher specified at fire drills, held regularly.

All staff members must walk slowly, not run!

If the emergency is bad enough, have the exit doors opened and direct the patrons to the nearest one. And without damage to the patrons' clothing, use the fire extinguisher, carefully and with efficiency. This may only be accomplished through constant drilling!

All Exit Doors Numbered

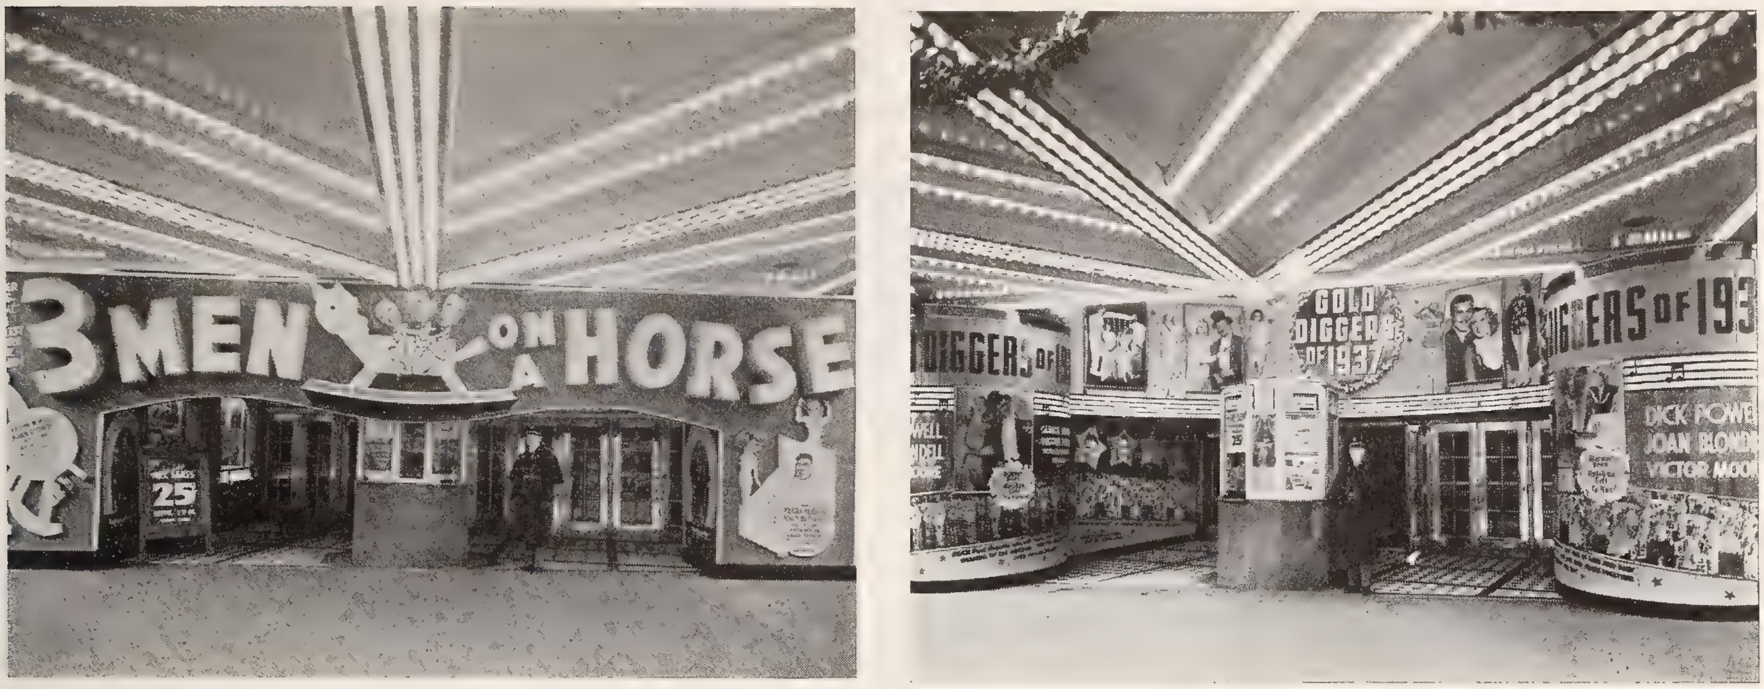
At the Hippodrome I am having all my exit doors numbered and am instructing my staff as to the location of every one. Consequently, this numbering system ties in with the general plan in handling emergencies. Incidentally, the "numbered door" idea is effective in case of boys trying to break into your theatre. You can notify that "crashers" are at door No. 4 and, immediately, men will leave for that location without having to lose time with a long description. Here's an example of how the numbered door idea works. A fire breaks out in the mezzanine or aisle No. 2 down in front! We would signal station No. 9, which covers the exit door opposite the fire and every member of the staff in that vicinity participates in guiding the audience quietly out. All during time you have a man standing by at the phone in case it is necessary to call the fire department.

Moving about quietly—talking in a low tone—keeping cool—and using the 30 per cent of gray matter in your cranium are the things which keep people from getting panicky and undoubtedly save many lives, otherwise sacrificed in a wild bedlam.

Your ushers can become excellent firemen if you look upon the job of drilling them as an operation of primary importance.

The secret—"Drill your house staff regularly . . . and according to rules that fit the requirements of your theatre!"

The result—"Potential possibilities of catastrophe reduced to a minimum!



FRONTS AT THE NEW YORK STRAND THEATRE FOR "THREE MEN ON A HORSE" AND "GOLD DIGGERS"

The Boxoffice Merry-Go-Round Reported by Margolius

Fancy lobby selling the harvest-slant was the theme employed by Mort Margolius, at the College, Toronto, for his recent Fall Festival of Hits. Stage settings and lighting were in keeping and clips out of picture trailers were built into a special advance on coming attractions. Through district business men's association, merchants were prevailed upon to hold special sales and monthly calendars with the coming dates were distributed widely and displayed by cooperating stores. Local paper did a bit of bass-drumming with Mort writing the copy.

Smart flash on "China Clipper" at the cost of a few cents took the form of an old cotton banner used under the marquee. Mort cut it up, reversed it and had it painted with appropriate copy which gave him two fresh valances to hang from the roof of the building. Baby spots from the marquee were trained on the banners and the entire cost was 40 cents for the paint.

Novelty that "drove 'em nuts," says Mort on "Godfrey" proved to be a small envelope with the following on the cover in black caps: "Is This Your Ticket? To the picture everyone is raving about?" Inside, there was a small card similar in shape and layout of a regular theatre ticket with picture copy. On the end, there were numbers and it seems that the folks figured the numbers meant free admissions or something. With this in mind, they scanned the ads, read the drama news, phoned the theatre and also of course came to see the picture.

Lawler's "Outlaw" Display

In connection with the showing of "You Can't Get Away With It," Ralph Lawler, manager of the Newman, Kansas City, secured from Merle A. Gill, ballistics expert of the police department, the latter's famous collection of firearms, handcuffs and test bullets, for display in the lobby. The collection, eight large cases, contains famous outlaw guns, guns used by "Pretty Boy" Floyd, Harvey Bailey, Henry Starr, Cole Younger, Bonnie Parker, Alvin Karpis, Al Spencer and others. Besides handcuffs, it contains numerous other restraining devices.

Unusual Displays For Strand Fronts

For the front on "Three Men on a Horse" at the New York Strand, a wood-burning process was adapted as used extensively by wood etchers. Combination of pine wood for the title and credits and red-grained leather for background were the materials employed. Title was built of wood block letters, five feet high and 10 inches thick with letters etched in outline and electric soldering iron used for the burnt effect. For the comedy slant, wooden hobby horse with one eye blinking and caricatures of the three principals was mounted in the center of the arch. For the front panels, hobby horse and comedy scene were cut out of natural pine wood, figures burnt in with the soldering iron. Wooden figures were in miniature with life-size colored heads of the principals. Entire background of arch and built up front were of red-grained leather and strips of pine outlined the front. For comedy purposes, all copy and displays were mounted lopsided.

Additional Depth for "Gold Diggers"

On "Gold Diggers," the usual flat arch was avoided to utilize the additional depth and with the added visible display space, the continuity of the display was unbroken to the eye in the complete sweep of the front. Usual frames were covered with false front and sides built in a drum effect continuing the sweep to the return walls. Gold cloth sprayed with gold flitter was used for background with corrugated satin paper for contrast. Against the satin were cutout star heads mounted on three-foot covered gold-flittered stars. Center title plaque was garlanded in silver leaves entwined with red ribbon and for pictorial display five enlargements were mounted on musical notes. Cutouts of the girls and panorama strips of scenes were mounted against background with a band of musical notes and bars placed across the entire display.

Both fronts were designed by B. F. "Dinty" Moore, managing director, and constructed by the Sid Nagler Studios.

State-Lake Gives Short Feature Picture Campaign

Chicago was treated to some unusual showmanship recently when the State-Lake set a new precedent by billing the Universal G-Man short, "You Can't Get Away With It," over the feature both in newspaper ads and the house front. Fritz Blicki of the State-Lake after screening the short for an invited audience, built up the date with marquee, front, lobby boards, tieups, newspaper ads, etc., to give the short feature picture importance.

Through the assistance of the local G-Man headquarters, authentic stills and "wanted" cards were secured for a lobby panel. Giant 3-foot illuminated letters spelled out the title above marquee. The displays out front and inside the lobby were given predominating spots. Tieup was secured with the Illinois Central Railroad for the use of special 30 by 40 posters on time table stands.

Stewart Uniforms Staff For "Pigskin" Buildup

Ten days ahead of opening of "Pigskin Parade," C. H. Stewart, Waco Theatre, Waco, Texas, placed a large cutout football in his lobby ten days ahead, using plenty of stills and catchy copy. Football togs, helmets, shoes and other football material was built around the display, with crepe paper streamers in colors of local college and high school over all.

Entire staff was dressed in football uniforms and for street bally 17-foot cutout of player was attached to engine of automobile properly bannered which toured streets. Private screening was held for sports editors with resultant good newspaper breaks and radio plugs were used week ahead.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

McAllen, Texas

Dear Herald:

We are writing this in our shirtsleeves with the windows and doors open, and we can look out and see the trees loaded with oranges and grapefruit, and it certainly is fine for a winter day, but somehow we'd like to go out and wallow in one of John Piller's snowbanks up at Valley City, North Dakota, and John no doubt has plenty of 'em.

Last week we told you fishermen to look out for a fish story, but this isn't a fish story. You can believe it or not, it's a fact. We are a whole lot like the colored brother was when his parson told him not to send him any more requests for donations, so he wrote the parson and said, "Dear Pahson, dis hain't no request, dis am a fact, Ah hain't got no pants."

We wonder if any of you know J. C. Fanning, the operator of the theatres at Brownsville, Texas. If you don't that's too bad.

J. C. wears two belts, one for the championship theatre operator of south Texas and the other one for being the best fisherman of the Rio Grande valley, and nobody can get them away from him.

J. C. invited us to come down and go fishing with him, and we did. He had everything ready, boat, tackle, bait and— well, we'll skip that, and he had a Mexican to handle the boat.

We went fishing in the ship channel which was dug by the government from the gulf to within a few miles of Brownsville. This channel is about twelve miles long, one hundred yards wide and twenty-five feet deep, and the water carries the same amount of salt that the gulf does, and the fish are salt water fish. We didn't still-fish any but we trolled all the while, and there is no use to tell you how many we caught, for you wouldn't believe it anyway, and sometimes we doubt it ourself, but anyhow, we caught 38 trout and two redfish and we were lucky enough to grab onto a ribbon fish. This was the first one we ever saw.

This ribbon fish was about three feet long, five inches wide and two inches deep, and it had all the colors of the rainbow. We don't know whether it was good to eat or not, we didn't eat it because it reminded us of an eel, and we don't eat eels, in fact we'd about as soon eat a muskrat or a bullfrog, but we did catch 38 trout and two redfish, and we are not going to make an affidavit to this either.

J. C. caught the most of them and he hooked onto two that were so big he couldn't land 'em. We don't know whether they were shark or tarpon, but then you know that the big ones always get away anyhow.

J. C. has it all arranged for us to come down and go with him again, and we are going to do it and maybe we'll send you some affidavits if you insist, but we hope you won't insist.

Christmas Day we were invited to a friend's house for a turkey dinner, and every time we go to a turkey dinner we are about as lively, for two or three days after, as a snake that has swallowed a jackrabbit. To do justice to a turkey dinner one should have an appetite like that boy Zimmerman at San Marcos, Texas.

There were 18 guests present. All of them but two were from our home town of Neligh, Nebraska, and every time we think of our home town we wonder how the cows are getting along and if the roosters are waking the folks up to shovel the snow off the sidewalks.

Then Christmas night the Chamber of Commerce here in McAllen put on a party for the visitors. Each one was to bring a present, not to cost less than five cents nor more than twenty-five. These presents were hung on a tree and each guest was to get one and they were to exchange with someone else if they so wished.

We'll betcha we got more'n a bushel basket full of Christmas greetings from theatre folks from all over the country, but Ernie won't give us space to mention but a part of 'em, he's so tight that way. P. G. Estee of Parker, S. D., says he missed our Colyum and for us to not let it happen again. Mae and Sherm Fitch sends greetings from Sioux Falls, S. D.; Mrs. C. G. Lawing from Charlotte, S. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peterson, Hampton, Iowa; Congressman Karl Stefan, Norfolk, Neb.; Louise Fazenda, Hollywood Cal.; Mildred Early, Herald office, Hollywood, Cal.; Mrs. John Brady, Atkinson, Neb.; Mrs. Jack Walter, Muncie, Ind.; John Cosner, Sargent, Neb.; Mr. and Mrs. Lou Feldman, Pipestone, Minn.; Prof. G. I. Scott, director of orchestra, Spokane, Wash.; A-Mike Vogel of the Round Table department of the Herald, and many, many others we can't mention. A-Mike sent us his picture smoking a cob pipe and now we know where our pipe went to. When we first saw the picture we couldn't tell whether it was a picture of Thomas Jefferson, Woodrow Wilson, Bill Weaver, Clark Gable or Al Capone, but he was thoughtful enough to attach his signature, otherwise we might have thought that he occupied a cell next to our own.

Then we got a letter from Marvin Fosse of La Porte City, Iowa, enclosing a check and asking us to have the Herald sent to him at La Porte City and one to his theatre at Wellman, Iowa. Thanks, Mr. Fosse, we will do it with pleasure, and you will get them, too.

We have traveled the country for about 12 years and have sent the Herald thousands of checks and Dennis Shea has never failed to send the Herald

But to get away from Christmas and Christmas greetings for a spell. There is a town of about three thousand down here that, according to the papers, has a bonded indebtedness of $1,600,000.00 and past due interest and other obligations of $300,000.00 more, and the mayor and city council have declared the city helplessly and hopelessly insolvent and has asked that a receiver be appointed.

This is another instance of trying to spend themselves into prosperity. It can't be done by an individual, municipality or government. If we spend more money than we take in, the mudhole will be just around the corner, and when we think of the condition of this city we are glad we live in Neligh, Nebraska, for there we have no indebtedness, the county has no indebtedness and the state has no indebtedness

Well, we live and learn, and even though we do we are going down to the Gulf again with J. C. and Bob Smith of the Mission theatre at Mission and watch 'em pull out some of the big ones, but until then, auf Wiedersehen.

A SHOWMAN PAYS TRIBUTE TO SHORT SUBJECTS

SHORT SUBJECTS cost a mint of money to produce. Like features . . . there are good and bad shorts . . . but the chief trouble is that the majority of theatremen never get to know the difference because they pay scant attention to them . . .

It is our business to pay attention to all product . . . features and shorts . . . and we now report a decided improvement in the quality of program builders . . . as we like to call the short subject . . . That is what they really are . . . only . . . too many theatremen look upon them only as fillers . . . losing interest and revenue that should result from proper emphasis and advertising of meritorious short subjects . . .

STR . . . trail blazer for many other innovations in trade paper publication practices . . . proposes to treat the short subject with all the respect due it and in an aggressive effort to make the theatremen appreciate the value and possibili-ties of them . . . And the idea is . . . based . on the practical truth that short sub-cts must be better emphasized than y are at the present time.

MODERN BUT IN LOCAL TRADITION

■ Two views of the exterior of the Waldo theatre in Waldoboro, Me., a small town in which old New England has been faithfully preserved. The upper view of the facade at night, shows the modern touch given the Georgian Colonial architecture by illumination from sources hidden in shrubbery and in cornice troughs. Note the display frames, a slight theatrical adaptation advised by the absence of a marquee. The doorway at the side is for the "motor car trade." This theatre, owned by Carroll T. Cooney of Waldoboro, and designed by Ben Schlanger of New York, is fully described beginning on page 7.

New Theatre Projects In 1936 Totaled 531

A TOTAL of 531 new theatres were placed under construction in the United States, or definitely planned during 1936, according to a count of reports received during the year from BETTER THEATRES correspondents covering every key city and surrounding territories. Allowing for a small number of projects postponed or abandoned, a check of the reports against those of general construction agencies shows that the figure 531 approximates the total number of theatre projects for the year. New projects reported during the year 1935 numbered about 300.

The East North Central group of States reported the greatest number of projects—92. The West North Central was next with 75. The Middle Atlantic, which includes New York, reported 67. Totals for other sections were New England, 31; South Atlantic, 62; East South Central, 21; West South Central, 41; Mountain, 17; and Pacific, 55. Totals for each State are given in an adjoining tabulation.

Engineers to Probe Theatre Air-Conditioning

A PROGRAM of research to be conducted during the next two years has been decided on by the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, as part of a broad plan of technical investigation. The aim of the research, according to Col. W. A. Danielson, chairman of the committee in charge, is "to find out just what constitutes comfort or discomfort in air-conditioned enclosures frequented by a large number of persons." In announcing the program, the society issued a statement saying, in part:

"As the result of preliminary tests made last summer and to be continued in 1937, it is expected that standards can be set up for the guidance of theatre owners which may go far to eliminate complaints or loss of patronage due to real or fancied grievances directed against the air conditioning system.

"All last summer the research laboratory of the society conducted tests in three different parts of the country—in Pittsburgh, Pa., Toronto, Canada, and in the state of Texas—to measure the 'comfort reaction' of hundreds of persons subjected to an air-conditioned environment in the hot summer weather. Seventy per cent of the voluntary human guinea pigs in Toronto were comfortable at effect temperatures from 68.5° to 71°; in Pittsburgh from 69.5° to 75°; and in Texas from 71° to 74°. Effective temperature, the committee points out, is a composite index of the dry-bulb temperature, relative humidity, air motion and other factors entering into the condition of the air."

According to the data secured by the research laboratory of the society, an effective temperature of 71° is indicated for areas having about the climatic conditions common to Toronto, while 73° effective temperatures are more suitable for localities having summer temperatures as hot or hotter than Pittsburgh. This includes the Middle Atlantic States, the South and Southwestern regions.

Operating costs will also be studied.

Temperature Limits Set By Health Authorities

INDICATING THE increased attention being given the effect of air cooling in theatres and other public and semipublic buildings, by authorities, the health department of Cincinnati has made a regulation respecting temperatures, while in New Orleans the board of health is considering similar restrictions.

Although temperature is only one factor in the determination of healthful and comfortable air conditions, both cities consider only temperature. In Cincinnati the inside air must not be greater than 15° lower in temperature than the outside air, and penalties of from $25 to $100 for violation are provided.

Concerning the proposed New Orleans regulation, Dr. J. M. Batchelor, health superintendent, expressed the opinion that the minimum temperature for New Orleans theatres and similar buildings should be 74° in summer, and the winter maximum should be 80°.

Marquee and Sign Restrictions Proposed

A PROPOSED resolution amending the city building code of Wilmington, Del., restricting the erection, construction, and maintenance of signs and marquees, and giving the board of directors of the street and sewer department the power to grant permission for erection of signs, advertising, and ornamentation upon marquees, has been given first and second reading. The proposed resolution is the result of consultation with legal counsel on the advisability of amending the building code following the request of the Stanley-Warner Company, operating five theatres in Wilmington, for information regarding the erection of signs on theatre marquees, and the request of the Ace theatre, independent neighborhood house, for permission to maintain a sign-type neon marquee which has already been installed.

A. J. Vanni, Warner Bros. zone manager in charge of the Wilmington Warner houses, and Louis S. Black, manager of the Aldine theatre, appeared before the board requesting the information. Previously Benjamin Shindler, manager of the Ace theatre, appeared before the board and asked to be allowed to keep a sign-type marquee. Through a misunderstanding between Mr. Shindler and the directors of the street and sewer department, the Ace manager had the marquee erected after the building code became effective.

New Theatre Projects Carry Far into 1937

PLANS FOR NEW theatre construction continue to be reported in substantial number from all parts of the country as the new year begins, supporting predictions heard in many theatre circles that 1937 would make even greater contributions than 1936 to the gradual replacement of the industry's exhibition plant. Nor do these plans include remodeling, which is also expected to maintain its 1936 pace during the present year. From reports received during the latter part of December and the first week of January, the following have been selected as representative of the sizes and types of theatres projected, and location of the greatest activity.

Walter Reade and associates have started construction on Washington Street, Toms River, N. J., of the first of a group of so-called "model" theatres which this circuit plans to erect in small cities not now adequately supplied with screen entertainment. Construction is expected to start shortly also on a house at Broadway and William Street in Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Both theatres will seat more than 1,000. Reade said he expects to have ten of the houses completed by July 1.

Nicholas J. Basil, president and general manager of Basil Brothers Theatres, has announced purchase of land in Niagara Falls, N. Y., on which a 1,200-seat theatre will be erected. It will be completed in August and will be known as Basil Brothers' LaSalle.

Joseph Reed, vice president of Allied Theatres of Connecticut, and operator of a Washington Depot house, plans to build a modern 500-seat theatre on the main street of Ridgefield.

D. R. Bly of Conneaut, Ohio, will build a new 500-seat theatre in Ashtabula, Ohio, from plans drawn by Potter & Bremer of Cleveland. It will be a two-story structure of brick, steel and Haydite, with office space on the second floor, and is expected to cost approximately $20,000.

A new $75,000 theatre is being built at Hull, Que., for Interprovincial Theatres, Ltd., and Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

Louis Berkoff, operator of the La Tosca and Dreamland theatres in Los Angeles, is building a new house to be called the Kinema.

Work has been started on a new theatre in Galveston, Tex., at 21st and Church Streets, which will become part of the Interstate circuit, of which Galveston Theatres, Inc., is a local unit. Later a Galveston neighborhood house will be erected by the same company.

Plans have been drawn for a new theatre to be erected in Boone, N. C., and construction is expected to start soon. A. E. Hamby and W. Ralph Winker are in charge of the work.

Plans are under way for the construction of a theatre on West 72nd Street between Columbus Avenue and Broadway, New York City. The property was recently acquired by Fenden Realty Corp., headed by George W. Anger.

Construction has been started by the Leff-Meyers circuit on a new 600-seat theatre, to be called the Terminal, at 170th Street and Grand Concourse, New York City.

Bids were opened recently for the erection of a new theatre in University City, Mo. Plans, prepared by O. W. Stiegemeyer, St. Louis, call for a one-story building of brick construction.

A new theatre will be erected in South Boston, Va., as the result of a recent fire which caused damage amounting to approximately $150,000. The Lee theatre, a new structure, owned by U. W. Carper, operator of two other theatres in Martinsville, was destroyed.

H. B. Ram, managing director of the State Theatre Corporation, announces that work will commence next July on a new theatre at Aiken, S. C., to cost approximately $100,000. The front will contain one store building and the theatre entrance. The theatre will seat 800.

BEN SCHLANGER — Architectural Form

Strand Amusement Company, owned by Jacobson & Levine, recently purchased an unfinished theatre in Torrington, Conn., and will proceed immediately to complete it for a February opening. About 1,000 seats are to be installed.

Ground was broken December 23 for the first motion picture theatre in Denville, N. J. Set for completion by April, the new structure will have a frontage of 75 feet and a 125-foot depth. It will be of concrete and steel construction and have a seating capacity of 750.

A. Combs announces that ground will be broken shortly for a new theatre at Newberg, Ore. Announcement is also made by J. T. Francis, who has operated the Francis theatre at Newberg for a number of years, that he will erect a second and larger house in that city.

Fred N. Thompson of Charlotte and Raleigh, N. C., has been awarded the general contract to build Raleigh's new theatre, the Ambassador, set for opening next September.

A $500,000 theatre is expected to rise in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn, New York City, next fall. Frisch and Rinzler have secured the plot, which fronts 150 feet on Meserole Street with an entrance on Graham Avenue.

Heater-Speaker Unit For All-Year Drive-ins

A COMBINATION speaker and heating unit that may make open-air theatres a year-around possibility in cold climates as well as warm, is being completed by Edward Comi, owner of the Theatre Service and Supply Company in Boston. The unit will operate from sockets placed along the ramps behind which the automobiles park.

The device, for which patents are being sought, incorporates a loudspeaker and a heating unit so that the passengers of the attendant automobiles will not have to open the windows of their machines to enjoy the programs. The volumes of both sound and heat can be controlled by individual knobs on each device. It is also asserted that the separate loudspeaker system will do away with synchronism difficulties brought about by the outdoor conditions and the largeness of the space.

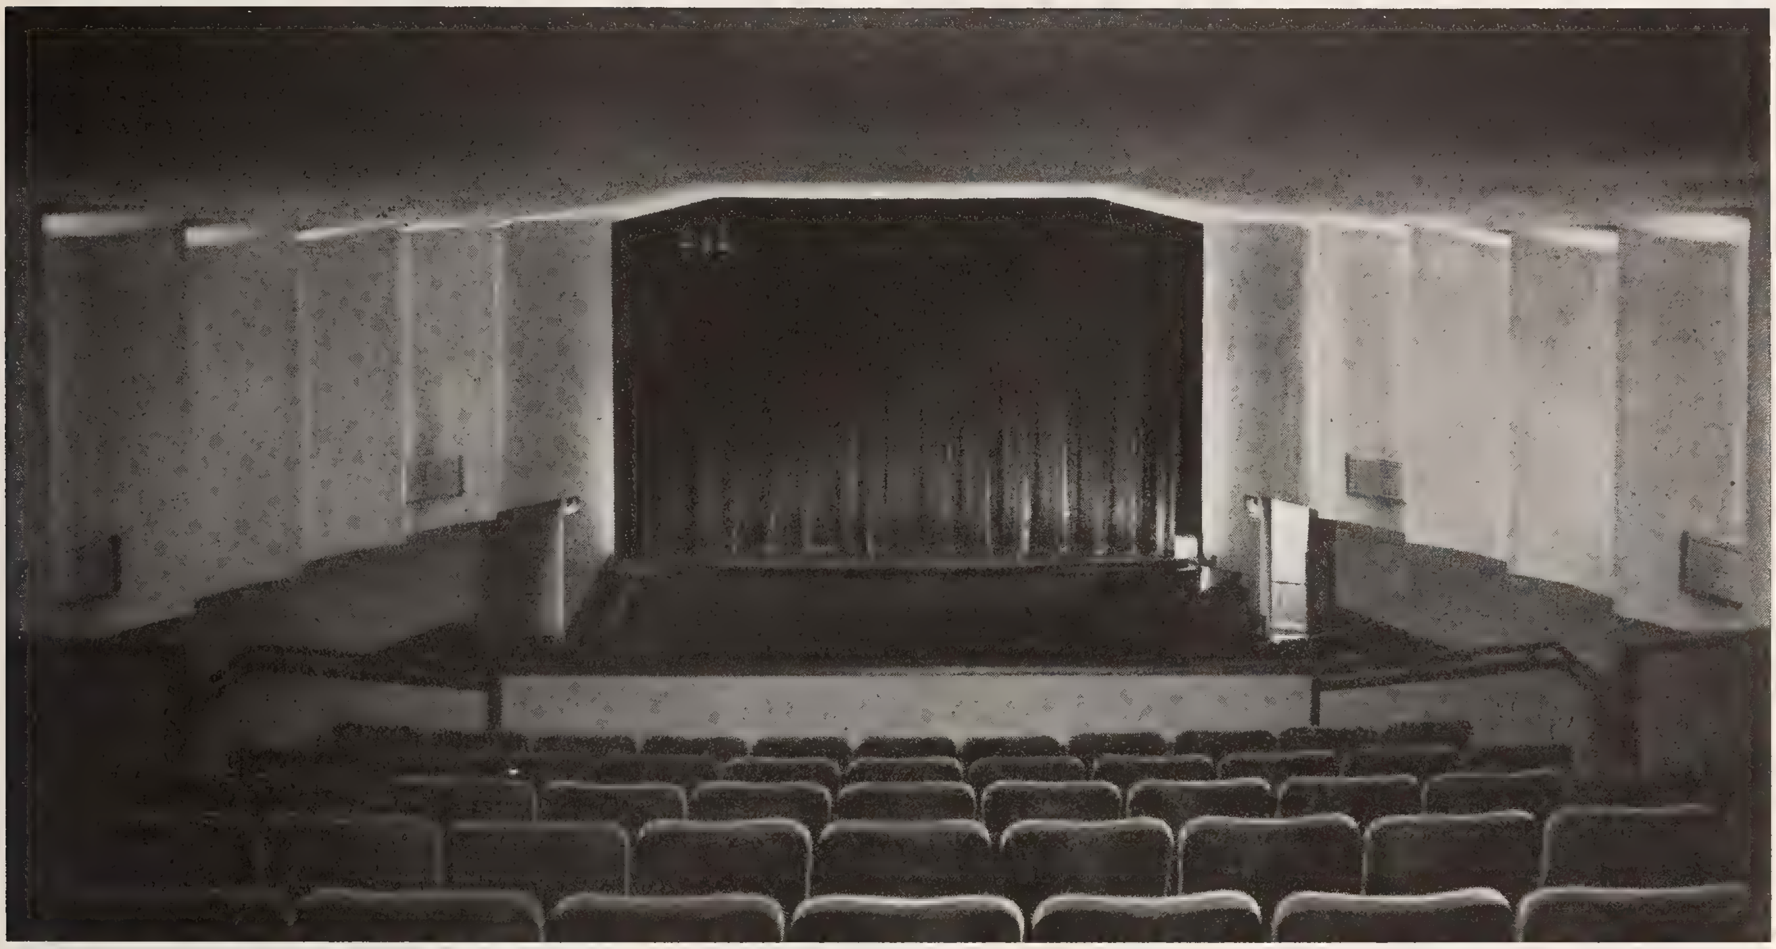
Boost Reproducer Price

A GENERAL price increase of 10 per cent, effective February 1, will go into effect on all contracts for Western Electric "Mirrophonic" sound equipment. The increase, according to C. W. Bunn, general sales manager of Erpi, is due to rising costs of production and operation.

Articles Postponed

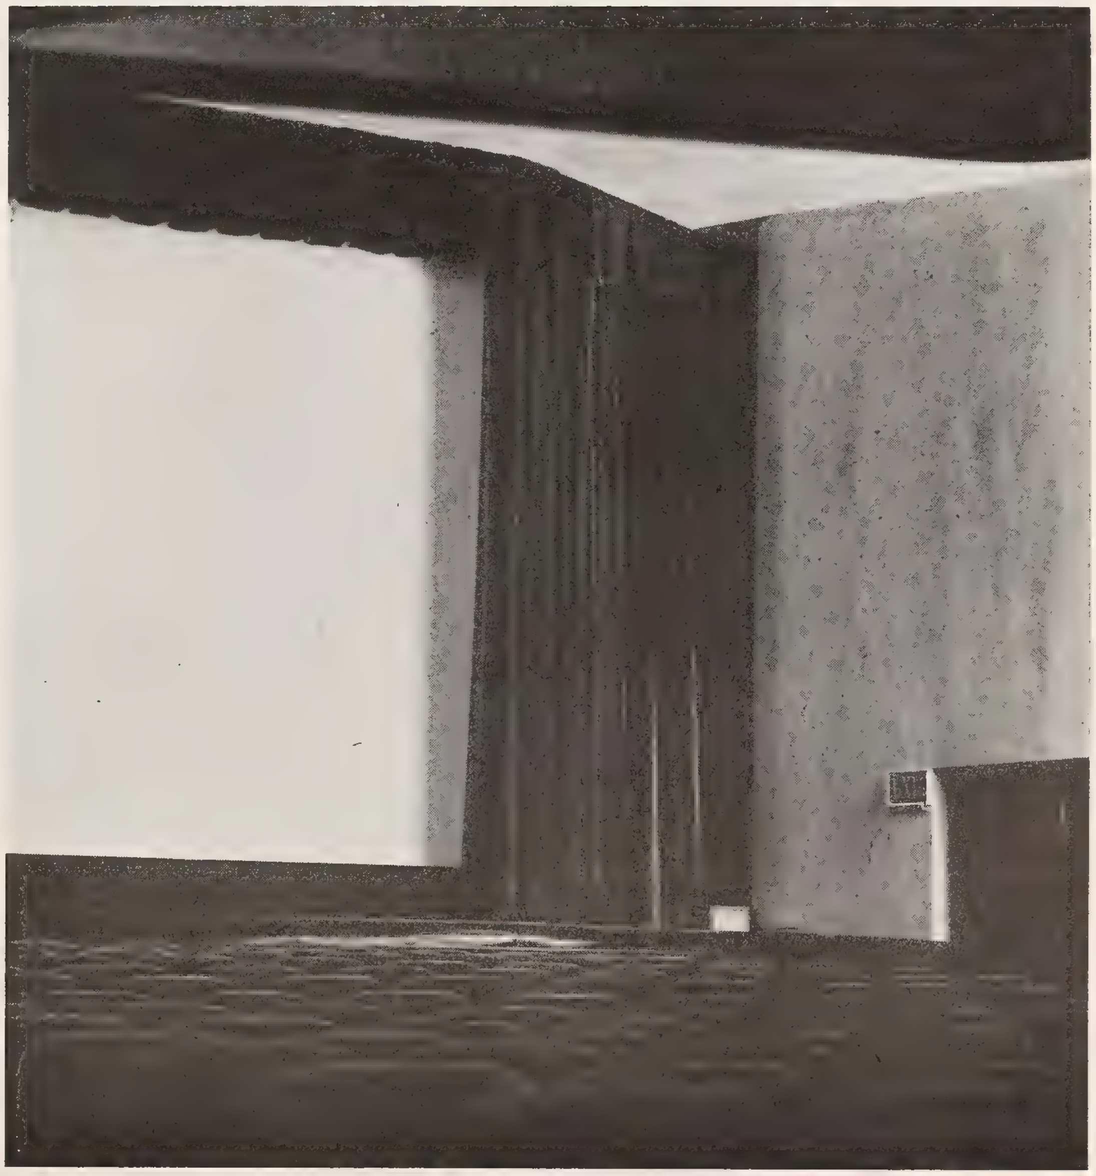
An article on lighting, as well as another on the operation of negro theatres, originally scheduled for this issue of BETTER THEATRES, had to be postponed because of revisions in illustrative material, which were delayed by the holidays.

Modernism Adapted to Local Scene



• Describing the Waldo theatre in Waldoboro, Me., a 450-seat house designed to express enduring New England tradition without sacrificing the functional values of modern treatments

Two views of the auditorium. Above is a general view taken from the modified balcony, showing the decorative effect of the walls attained entirely with light issuing from coves facing the proscenium arch. Below is a detail of the screen area, expressing the simplicity of the treatment.

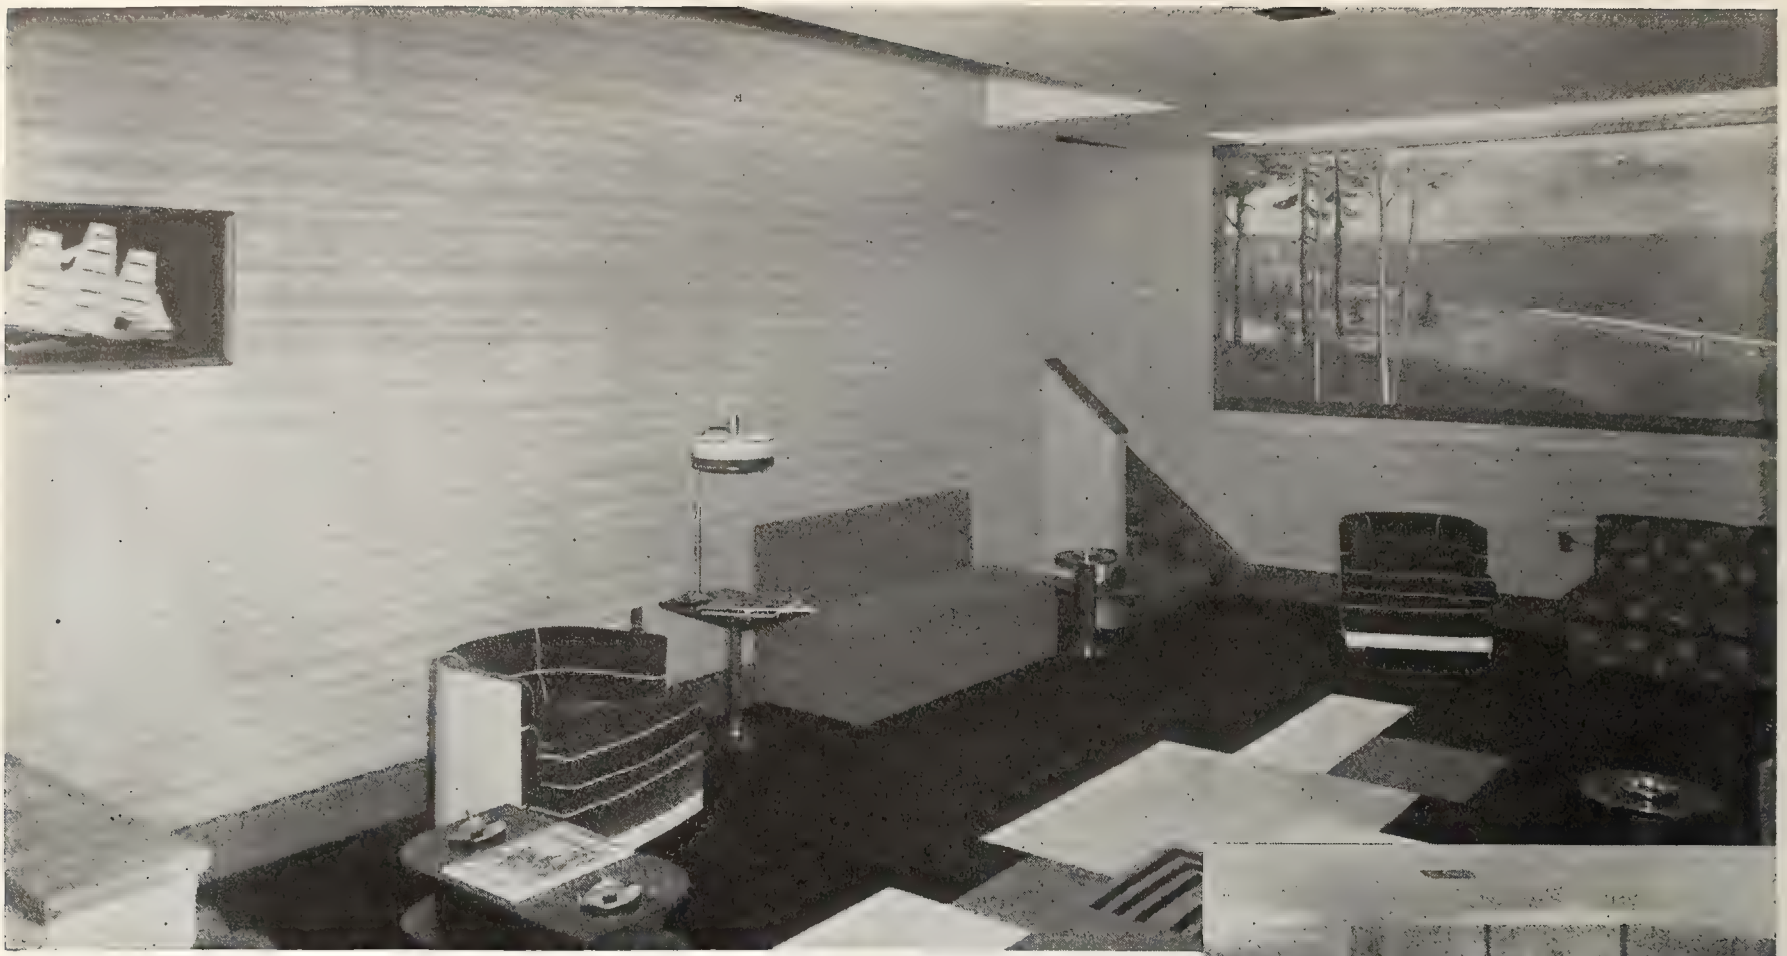


THE WALDO THEATRE in Waldoboro, Me., represents an architectural attack on problems presented by the technological factors of motion picture exhibition as much as upon those of pure architecture, considered aesthetically. And there was a distinctive aesthetic problem as well to be solved, due to the special character of the local scene.

Waldoboro is a small town in which old New England has remained as a tradition told in every tree-lined street and every building, and in the attitudes of the inhabitants as well. Waldoboro, moreover, is a summer resort, and to it come people who have been drawn by this region's rural Yankee charm. The house was built and is operated by Carroll T. Cooney, of Waldoboro, and is his first venture in show-business. Ben Schlanger of New York was the architect.

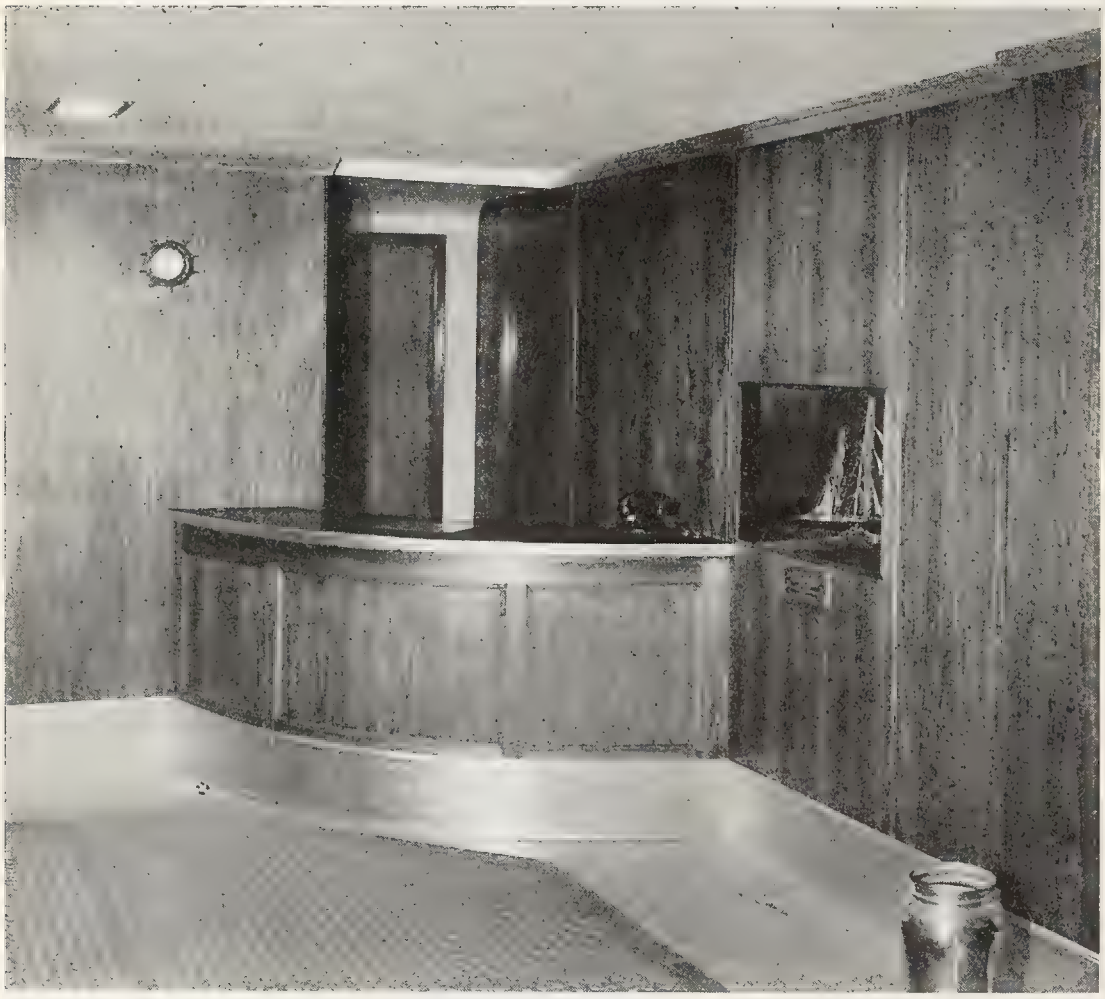
The conditions presented to the architect may be indicated as follows:

1. There was no limitation as to the physical shape or size of the plot.
2. The theatre was to seat 450 patrons,



Section of foyer-lounge. Staircase at corner leads to men's and women's rooms in mezzanine.

Traffic lane direct to all seating areas.



Corner of lobby. Note wicket-less ticket counter, adopted for its greater intimacy.

each seat having to be a good seat for viewing motion pictures.

3. While the building had to have a limited size and cubage, its final plan had to give both the feelings of spaciousness and intimacy in its various parts.

4. The usual cold approach from the street to a lobby used for advertising and thence to the theatre chair was to be avoided.

5. From a technical and efficiency standpoint, the theatre had to function with the precision required of the mechanical and physical sciences involved in the presentation of the motion picture; in spite of the limited budget set forth, this theatre was to meet each substantial requirement for properly enjoying to the fullest extent the presentation of films.

Another condition was that the exterior of the Waldo theatre had to conform with the architecture of the local community, a requirement which could have been carried out with an equal degree of dignity in any of the architectural styles. On the other hand, it was decided that the interior of the theatre could best be expressed by using simple modern forms which would complement the film presentation, rather than compete with it, as would have been the case with stylistic architecture.

The plan of the Waldo is notable for the amount of accommodations compacted into the limited structure size. Spacious lobby, foyer, lounging room, rest rooms, promenade and the two levels of seating are all developed within an average internal height of approximately 22 feet. There is no excavation, with the exception of a boiler room and space for the ventilating trenches.

The placing of the main lounge, foyer and promenade in the advantageous locations shown in the accompanying plans, was accomplished by placing the rear half of the seats on a raised mezzanine level, thereby releasing the space below this upper level for these purposes. The upper level of seating also insured better unobstructed vision of the screen from these seats. The inclusion of two levels of seating within such a limited height was made possible by the use of the reverse floor slope, as originated by Mr. Schlanger.

The seating plan was shaped to eliminate all objectionable seating locations. The mezzanine seats are easily and quickly accessible by means of two stairways of short runs (see accompanying photographs and plans.) The mezzanine seats occur at an advantageous level for viewing the screen, the screen being just slightly below these seats.

A driveway adjoining the theatre leads to parking space at the rear.

A feature of the seating plan to be remarked is the provision of extra-wide seats in various parts of the auditorium for unusually large people. Rows and seats in the Waldo are numbered, and the large patron may be readily directed to a suitable chair upon entering.

A handsome souvenir booklet which pointed out among other features of the theatre, this unusual provision to opening night patrons, also told of facilities for calling any patron from the audience in case of an inquiry at the door. The patron expecting such an inquiry may so announce upon entering, and a number is provided. If there is a call for the person, the number appears on a small electric sign above an exit door toward front of auditorium.

MATERIALS AND EQUIPMENT

WALDO THEATRE, WALDOBORO, ME.

Owner: Carróll T. Cooney. Architect: Ben Schlanger.

Construction and Plan: The building is of brick and steel construction (steel frame mezzanine and roof trusses), semi-fireproof. It is 97 feet long, 46 feet wide and has an average height of 24 feet. The site is 150 feet from the main business street. The building is set back so that the front is 20 feet from the street walk, affording space for trees and shrubbery. Two floodlights concealed in the shrubbery, and indirect lighting from sources located under the cornice illuminate the front. A special side entrance opens into the lobby from a driveway on the right side of the building which admits to a parking area at the rear.

Front: The facade is of Georgian Colonial style, executed in brick and wood. There is no marquee, but two display cases have been built into the front wall.

Lobby: This is plain in form, with wall finish in walnut veneer and cornices and base of aluminum. The ticket booth is located in a corner of the lobby, but is merely a curved open counter, without a wicket. As an element of decoration a ship model is set in a recess to one side of the ticket counter, reminiscent of Maine's seafaring history. Flooring covering consists in rubber mats (by Goodyear Sundries Company) set in a recess bordered by terrazzo. Illumination is entirely from cornice lighting troughs.

Foyer-Lounge: The room is entered from the lobby and leads to the auditorium and, by a staircase at one corner, to the mezzanine level. Illumination is from ceiling lighting troughs, built in. Extending across one side wall is a mural representative of life in Maine, both past and present. Elsewhere wall treatment is in Salubra wall paper. The floor is entirely carpeted, while modern furniture (by Modernage, New York) completes the appointments.

Men's and Women's Rooms: These are on the mezzanine level, reached from the foyer-lounge. The toilet rooms are off a central area treated as a lounge, with full-carpeting, wall finish in Salubra paper, and furniture of Colonial style in maple.

Auditorium: Width at widest point is 45 feet. Depth from rear wall to stage is 78 feet. Height at first row of seats is 20 feet. There are a total of 450 seats, 189 in the stadium and 261 in the orchestra. There are two aisles on either side of the middle bank of seats. Distance of first row from screen is 16 feet. Chairs are by American Seating Co., full upholstered with spring edge seat, of grey green mohair. Rockwool blankets one inch thick covered with raisin colored fabric are used on front facias of mezzanine and mezzanine stairs, also on rear wall of mezzanine, this material being furnished by George R. Hall & Sons, New York City. Interior surfaces are sand-finished, grayish buff-tinted plaster. Illumination of auditorium consists of three color indirect lighting built into a series of closely spaced vertical lighting troughs. There is also screen and curtain footlighting, and a continuous hidden horizontal lighting strip under the vertical troughs. The vertical wall surfaces are so shaped as to give diffusion of light.

Projection: Projection room is 13½ by 19 feet, with toilet and washroom provisions. Color scheme is buff and cream. Construction is brick-steel-concrete. Angle of projection is 4 degrees and distance of throw 80 feet. Size of screen image is 17½ feet wide. Two R.C.A. unit sound projectors are employed with complete R.C.A. sound system. Projection lighting is by suprex-type high intensity. Copper oxide rectifiers are used. Hearing aids are provided for 20 patrons.

Air-Conditioning: Complete indirect heating system and ventilation supplying 30,000 C.F.M.

Lighting Equipment as Applied To Modern Auditorium Forms

● A discussion of the various types of lighting used in theatres, their specific functions and methods of making each best serve its purpose

By BEN SCHLANGER

MOTION PICTURE auditorium lighting may be divided into four separate classes according to purpose, as follows:

(1) Effect, (2) Presentation (at screen area, but not projection), (3) Emergency, and (4) Utility.

The requirements of each of these phases of lighting are distinctly different from one another. Too often no special consideration is given to these separate uses, the installation providing only one means of lighting that is expected to serve all purposes. This is not by any means a criticism of the use of certain lighting equipment which can be put to several uses; on the contrary such a method is to be recommended if the equipment is designed and placed in the plan of the theatre with this thought in mind.

EFFECT LIGHTING

An analysis of the functions of these separate phases of lighting will indicate the importance of providing equipment capable of producing the various types of light necessary. First, effect is the lighting used before, after or between performance. Effect lighting is used to create a mood, provide in a way a sort of entertainment which sometimes is used in conjunction with music and all of which is supposed to serve as a transition into the motion picture performance (for example, a prologue). There is plenty of leeway in the selection of types and methods of lighting to be used for this purpose. Usually this lighting is overdone and without taste, especially when used to silhouette and panel-light poorly designed architectural forms.

PRESENTATION LIGHTING

Presentation (screen area) lighting is by far the most important phase of motion picture auditorium lighting. It is the lighting that could and should be used during the screen performance. It must be designed so that it will, in no way compete with the screen; on the contrary, it should help to make the screen appear more natural. It does this chiefly by eliminating sharp contrast between the dark interior of the theatre and the brightly illuminated screen.

Recently constructed theatres, and recent research work carried on by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and others, have proved the value of this type of lighting (see diagrams). Difficulty in obtaining proper design, due mostly to its comparatively new use, and current consumption costs in some localities have a tendency, for the time being, to limit somewhat the popularity of this type of lighting. Current consumption costs are high because long lines of continuous indirect or concealed light are the essential elements in the scheme. However, there seems to be a definite tendency towards lower lamp and current cost, especially in volume use. The use of neon tubing, concealed, would be ideal from a cost standpoint if economical means of dimming could be developed tor neon lighting. Judicial economy in the use of presentation lighting can be effected also by limiting its use to the performances of fuller capacity, letting an agreeable form of emergency lighting suffice for the remainder of the time.

EMERGENCY LIGHTING

The emergency lighting, consisting in exit, chair and certain other minimum illumination which, in addition to being connected to the regular service, is also connected to a set of batteries or a separate service, needs the same careful study which is required of the presentation lighting because this lighting, too, is on during the performance and therefore must not compete with the projection illumination of the screen.

Utility lighting useful for cleaning, or for occasions when the auditorium is employed for purposes which make a large quantity of light necessary for reading, etc., should be achieved, wherever possible, by suitable direct types of lighting to effect the necessary economies.

LIGHT PLACEMENT

Before referring to the various methods and equipment needed to achieve the lighting discussed, an understanding of lighting

Diagrams 1 and 2 show the methods of indirect lighting commonly used in recent motion picture auditorium lighting. There are two objections to these methods—first, the shields covering the lamps form dark areas (referred to in the text); second, the light is not evenly spread and fades at the end farthest from the light source. Diagrams 3 and 4 show the methods of indirect-lighting which eliminates the dark bands present in the schemes indicated by Diagrams 1 and 2. The even illumination is also difficult with these methods. Diagram 3 shows a somewhat better method by slanting the surface to be illuminated towards the light source. Diagram 5 shows an indirect lighting method which completely eliminates dark areas, as in the case of Diagram 1, and also produces an even amount of light for the entire surface by means of a curve which faces the light source increasing in curvature amount as the distance from the light source increases.

Lives Next to Theatre But Never Saw a "Movie"

Jim Scoville, one of the owners of the Parma theatre in Parma, a town just west of Cleveland, vouches for this one. Next door to the theatre lives a florist, and the other day, having been called to the theatre office on business, he took a quick glance at the screen in passing through the rear of the auditorium. Admitting he had never seen a motion picture before, he remarked, "It's somethin' like vaudeville, ain't it?"

A DEPARTMENT OF PRACTICAL COUNSEL AND TIMELY INFORMATION

CONDUCTED BY J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Determining and Controlling Theatre Construction Costs

● How the theatre owner desiring definite budget assurances should proceed in getting estimates and letting contracts for new building or remodeling

DURING THE PAST year the theatres of this country reinvested large sums of money in the improvement of their properties. Of course, the total amount of expenditures for such repairs, renewals and improvements, plus new construction, is not available at this writing, but it would be surprisingly large. There is every indication that even larger sums will be expended during 1937.

With this thought in mind, it might be advisable to discuss some of the problems of remodeling and new construction from the angle of contracts, estimates, and the steps in the letting of bids, rather than a further discussion on designs and new materials.

In the first place, many architects who have never previously designed a theatre, are being commissioned to remodel and construct new theatres, which usually have seating capacities of less than 1500 rather than more. There are at least two reasons for this—first, the architects who were well known prior to 1929 are now associated with high costs and the era of the three and four thousand-seat motion picture theatre; hence exhibitors seem to feel that those firms cannot gear themselves down to the smaller and less expensive type of theatre, which is so popular today. Secondly, the less well known architects have displayed a very high degree of ingenuity and resourcefulness and a willingness to face the theatre man's problem of low construction costs. They have also shown a flexibility and desire to learn something about theatre requirements.

In my opinion, the real handicap in theatre construction today and the greatest hazard of all, is that the art (if we may call it that) of estimating has apparently been lost from the architect's bag of tricks. It used to be that any architect's office of reasonable size maintained a capable estimator; but today, after the lean years of the depression, there are few such individuals. The architect too frequently relies on his own knowledge or that of one of his draftsmen to do the estimating; or he has a friend among the contractors who comes in on call and "guestimates" the job. I really mean guess, because one seldom sees today the "old-fashioned" detailed take-off of material, quantities and man-hours or days of labor.

One of the excuses for this failure which is most frequently heard, is that prices are rising or changing so rapidly that such an estimate means very little. Prices have always fluctuated, perhaps not quite so much as at the present time, but there has never been a time when, during building activity of any real proportions, prices have remained static.

Further discussion with the architect will disclose that he is handicapped because theatre men are slow in making up their minds; that they demand myriad changes, and that there is no one man who seems to have the final say-so. In this complaint there is some foundation; theatre men should realize that all delays add to the cost which ultimately must be borne by them; moreover, it seriously complicates the problem of completing details and specifications.

Only too frequently, jobs are started on bids based upon incomplete drawings and incomplete specifications. Under such conditions, the contractor makes sure to protect himself by keeping his bid plenty high, and in spite of that, the extras usually almost nullify the investment possibilities of the new work, with the result that both parties to the agreement are in undesirable positions.

PLAN FOR MAKING COST ESTIMATES

IT IS PROBABLY too much to expect that theatre men will change their methods, because in most transactions involving theatre operation, they are preceded by weeks and months of "off and on" consideration; then, at the eleventh hour, a decision is made, calling for the job to be completed in record-breaking time. This seems to be one of the characteristics of our business, and, presumably, it must have made more money for us than it has lost. However, the architects can, and should, do something to improve this condition, and one of the things which will help is to turn out workable, accurate estimates which will rebuild the confidence of prospective builders.

The best order to follow in making these estimates, is the order of construction starting with wrecking, followed by excavating and finishing, with painting and hardware. If the plans and specifications have been completed in all details, the estimate may follow the order of the specifications. In this way one can be sure of not omitting any item called for in the specifications. In following the specifications, the estimator, of necessity, refers to the plans and details for quantities. Each item, as taken from the plans, should be neatly checked, so that there is no chance of including the same item under two classifications of materials.

The estimate should be made on suitable forms, with spaces to show the classification of materials, the units and unit prices, and the extended total costs. By placing the estimates on special forms, it facilitates back checking, which is absolutely a necessity. An estimate once compiled along this plan can be altered from time to time as changes are made in the plans and specifications, so that when they are approved the estimate is practically ready at the same time, thus eliminating the necessity of waiting ten days or two weeks for revised estimates. Each sheet of the estimate should be footed up separately and the sheet totals carried directly to the summary sheet instead of carried forward to the following sheet. This obviates the necessity of changing all the footings and amounts brought forward should an error be discovered on any one sheet.

ESSENTIAL ITEMS

In pricing estimates, each item should be priced at its exact cost, whether material or labor; no overhead or profit should be added. Overhead and profit are added at end of estimate to cover the entire job.

To the total of the estimate and the overhead and profit should be added such items as compensation and liability insurance, fire and (in some instances, at least) tornado insurance, contractor's bond, travel expense, equipment rental, field supervision, field office if necessary, photographs and, finally, the architect's fee.

The foregoing is a brief description of a proper architect's estimate. None of the architects which I had occasion to contact during the past two years have gone into this detail, but I believe it is within the province of the owner or builder to demand such an estimate. With such an estimate before him, an exhibitor can with some degree of confidence arrange financing, sign leases and plan the whole project.

CONTRACTOR ESTIMATE

There is one more important use to be made of such a detailed estimate: If the general contractor is required to make a similar estimate, then the two estimates can be checked, one against the other, before the job is finally let. Frequently, such checks will prove worth while in reducing costs.

It is possible that the owner or builder might have trouble in getting a general contractor to divulge his estimated costs. Their attitude, of course, will to a large extent depend on just how they are invited to bid on the job. For instance, in some localities, when bids are submitted in the form of an "upset price figure," thereby absolutely limiting the liability of the owner to one fixed sum, the contractor is within his rights, should he be the low bidder, not to show how he figured the job. In a strict analysis of the situation, this might be all right; however, if any suspicion exists on the part of either the owner or the contractor, the refusal to divulge the contractor's cost estimates is the contractor's only protection, whereas the owner has the right to turn to another contractor. But if the owner expects the contractor to make a fair profit, and the contractor is satisfied with a fair profit, there is no particular reason why both should not lay their cards on the table. They certainly can agree on what amount or percentage constitutes a fair profit. If they can't, each has the right to withdraw from the negotiation.

CONTRACTS AND THEIR VARIATIONS

THERE ARE several types of general contracts. One is the upset cost, as above mentioned, wherein the contractor agrees to build as per plans and specifications for a fixed sum; if the job runs over, the contractor pays the overage. In this type of contract, one can expect a high figure, because the contractor must protect himself against contingencies. Also, in the upset cost contract, the owner faces the problem of careful field supervision in order to be assured that he is getting what the plans and specifications call for.

FIXED-FEE CONTRACT

Then there is a fixed-fee contract, based upon the estimate. In this case, the owner pays the overage should there be any. A variation of this contract is a fixed fee for the contractor and the contractor participating in the savings if the total expenditure is less than the estimate.

COST-PLUS CONTRACT

Finally, there is the old cost-plus contract or a variation of it, which is cost-plus with a guaranteed top figure for the job.

There are several variations and combinations of the above three basic forms of contracts, which need not be gone into here. Any of the above may be used with a penalty and bonus clause for completing the job on a definite time schedule. The penalty requires the contractor to pay to the owner a specified amount of money for each day that the time schedule is exceeded, and calls for the owner to pay a bonus of so much money per day for each day that the contractor is able to better the time schedule.

COST-PERCENTAGE TYPE

Perhaps one of the nicest ways to let a contract is on an agreed estimated cost and an agreed percentage for the contractor, the contractor's percentage to be figured by this formula: (2 x Estimated Cost—actual cost) x Percentage = Contractor's Fee.

By analyzing this formula, it will be seen that this is in reality an estimated cost and percentage contract, with a penalty and bonus feature, without any fixed amount stipulated, and based upon keeping the cost of the job within the estimate,

UNIT HEATERS IN THE THEATRE

● There are a number of the older theatres, particularly those of small seating capacity, that have always had inadequate heating systems, in many instances poorly designed, and for their size, rather expensive to operate. Several such conditions have been very satisfactorily corrected by the use of equipment known as unit heaters.

The unit heater is a heat exchange coil or series of tubes through which either hot water or steam from a central boiler plant flows. Behind this heat exchanger there is an electric fan; in front there is an automatic louver which opens when the fan is in operation and is closed at other times. There are other heaters with preset louvers which are adjustable and which can be locked in any position to give a fixed distribution.

There are also unit heaters which are directly fired by gas, generally called gas steam unit heaters. These have to be vented to the outside.

Unit heaters of the types described can by short runs of duct to the floor line become highly effective as a recirculating heat medium. In many instances two unit heaters located in the false proscenium on either side of the stage, have proved adequate for theatres up to 800 and 900 seats.

This method of heating has proved somewhat more satisfactory than the location of direct radiation along the side walls of an auditorium, in that the temperature throughout the auditorium is very much more uniform with the unit heater.

The cost of unit heaters as compared to the installation of additional direct radiation, is about an even stand-off, except that the installation is easier to accomplish with a unit heater with less disturbance to the operation of the theatre.

Unit heaters are also very satisfactory for use in cold, chilly lobbies and foyers. So frequently in the spring and the fall of the year, all that is needed in the lobby is a little heat, and with adequate warming of the air there is no necessity for heating the auditorium.

The movement of air caused by the fan is very pleasant, clears up stagnant spots and, as earlier mentioned, tends towards a more uniform overall temperature.

Unit heaters may be purchased without any ornamental embellishment for installation in certain locations where they may be boxed in and treated architecturally to conform to the theatre. This type of installation renders it inconspicuous without detracting from its effectiveness. There are other types on the market which are enclosed in very good-looking cabinets, and really they are not the slightest bit objectionable.

Unit heaters, with the movement and circularization of air, have proved highly satisfactory for restaurants, stores and areas where direct radiation located along the walls has given a spotty temperature condition.

Substantial savings can be made by the judicious installation of this type of equipment in theatres. There are at least fifteen reputable concerns manufacturing this equipment in all sizes, shapes and designs.—J. T. K.

STEEL CONTRACT

In every theatre where steel is required for the frame of the building, the question usually arises as to whether or not the structural steel contract should be a part of the general contract. There are few general contractors who are also structural steel contractors, so in most instances the general contractors only sublet the structural steel contract, and for this he is paid his overhead and profit on the structural steel contract. The owner certainly has the right to let the steel as a separate contract and save the added overhead and profit of the general contract. This procedure is to be recommended in cases where the steel estimate is substantial. This practice will often times be resisted by the general contractor, but on the other hand, a general contractor is sometimes happy to be relived of the responsibility.

If those theatre operators who contemplate building theatres in 1937 will demand complete plans and details and carefully drawn specifications, written in clear, concise language, combined with architect's estimates and contractors' estimates, they will be definitely assuring themselves of the best job for the money and will be aiding every other builder of theatres.—J. THEATRE INSPECTION FORM

WITH THE start of a new year it might be well to take precautionary measures which the theatre manager might well take to assure himself that his theatre is reasonably safe and that his staff is prepared to meet emergencies. If by any chance he is neglecting this important responsibility, there is no better resolution for 1937 than to institute an inspection service, patterned somewhat along that outlined in the following form, which should be revised to meet the conditions which exist in each particular operation.—J. Tools in the Projectionist's Kit for Regular and Special Use

● Citing implements and instruments needed in the projection room, and those which local unions might well make available for periodic tests

[The following discussion has been prepared, in response to an inquiry, by Charles A. Dentlebeck, director of projection for the Famous Players Canadian circuit.—THE EDITOR.]

IN OUR theatres we have a calibre of projectionist who can get good results while at the same time keeping the equipment in good shape for extended periods of time, with very little expense. On the other hand, we have projectionists who can get acceptable results, but so far as equipment maintenance is concerned, their tools might better be thrown away.

I believe the average projectionist gives acceptable performance, but I am of the opinion that when it comes to repairs, both mechanical and projection engineers are required if the equipment is to be kept in proper condition.

I am not particularly interested in the tools used by the projectionists, but if a local union or other group is desirous of seeing to it that equipment in all theatres under their jurisdiction are kept in good condition, it will discover that it has a very important and rather difficult job on its hands. Such work should be delegated to two or three very carefully trained men. For this work a great number of tools are not required. I will set forth my views as to those an organization should have, leaving each projectionist to select such as he may think desirable for his own use.

First of all, I would commend the test reels sponsored by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Naturally, the theatre projection room tool list should include scissors, pliers, screw drivers, oil cans, rags, etc., as well as a supply of jeweler's rouge and optical cloth or paper with which to keep mirrors and lenses polished, though some projectionists use Bon Ami with quite satisfactory results.

One of the items in my own kit that I value highly is an optical aligner, which I made in our repair shop. It is surprising how much a projector optical system will get out of alignment from time to time, and there should be a periodic, thorough check-up on this.

A gauge is necessary to maintain proper alignment of the carbon brush holders at right angles with the commutator. This is necessary for the reason that as the commutator wears or is turned down, the distance of the element to which the brush holder is attached thereto alters, hence the angle of the brush with the commutator face is not the proper angle. To get the best results from a generator an exactly correct angle is absolutely necessary. Especially for Hertner transverters and Roth generators, it is imperative that projectionists have a gauge of exactly the specific dimensions for his particular need [see accompanying drawings].

The gauge for the Roth generator is one inch square, $\frac{1}{16}$ inch thick. It is placed edgewise between the commutator and rod carrying the brush holder, and adjustment is so made that the fit is snug. The holder is then so adjusted that its thickness will just allow it to slide under between the holder and commutator, whereupon the brush will rest squarely upon the commutator, and when properly fitted thereto as to curvature, all will be well.

The transverter gauge drawings indicate clearly the manner in which this gauge is used. Points XX rest upon the commutator, with point Y snug against the lower part of the brush holder. In this position, the face of the gauge must be in contact with the upper part of holder.

I submit a list of the entire contents of my own tool outfit, with the remark that it is all my personal property, purchased over a period of years. It consists of a universal fuse and circuit tester, 110-550 volts; an assortment of small washers, screws, tapered pins, nuts and bolts; a 50-foot steel tape measure; a 6-inch scale (short steel ruler).

Other items are a Weston model 280-volt ammeter, Richardson's Bluebook of Projection, a slide rule, a focusing flashlight, a round-nose plier, set of good steel punches, a small cold chisel, a small center punch, six screw drivers of various sizes, one 8-inch pipe wrench. One small T-wrench, one 8-inch pipe plier, one set of "feelers," end cutters, one bulldog plier, one speed indicator, one 4-ounce hammer, scissors, diagonal cutters, a small hand vise, one set of Allen & Bristow wrenches, one blow torch, an opera glass, an optical aligner, an assortment of files, extra long "feelers" to check clearance on generators, one set of box wrenches, one output meter, one milliampere meter, an assortment of shims, solderless lugs, sandpaper and crocus cloth, gauge for checking brush alignment and angle, a gauge for checking position of carbons—and a Tong-Tester, rating from zero to 200 amperes.

The Tong-Tester [see drawing] is an English tool costing $75. It has two scale ranges of 0 to 50, and 0 to 150 amperes (price is somewhat less with only one to 0 to 800 amperes. By merely pressing a trigger, the tong encircles the wire, whereupon a correct reading is immediately available. The field that surrounds every wire carrying current is proportional to the amount of current. The instrument is accurate and is used by many of the largest electric companies. It cannot be burned out. It can be manipulated entirely with one hand. This instrument is a thing I would advise unions doing service work to own. The same instrument may be used on both a.c. and d.c.

A highly important point is proper amperage flow for a given diameter of carbon; also proper arc gap—in other words proper arc voltage. As all projectionists know, there is considerable controversy concerning arc voltage, but if projectionists wish to obtain best results they will adhere exactly to recommendation of the carbon manufacturer in this matter. Not only will they thus get the best possible results, but these will be obtained with maximum efficiency.—CHARLES A. DENTLEBECK.

What '36 Gave and '37 Promises to Sound

[The year just passed was probably the most productive of genuine improvement in motion picture sound since its early years. Following are two statements that trace the advancement made, while at the same time indicating the lines along which we may expect this element of the motion picture performance to make further progress during 1937.—THE EDITOR.]

SOUND IN 1937

By EDWIN M. HARTLEY
RCA Photophone Division
RCA Manufacturing Company

EXHIBITORS AND the theatre-going public may look forward to a widespread improvement in motion picture sound during the coming year. In 1936, many important technical advances in sound bridged the gap from the great engineering and research laboratories to the recording studios of the major motion picture companies, the leading film processing laboratories and to hundreds of theatres throughout the country. The tireless engineers and laboratory research workers will witness the fruition of their great efforts in 1937 and the years to come.

Edwin M. Hartley

In the field of recording, an important development has been the use of push-pull recording for master negatives; another, the ultra-violet system of recording. Briefly, the push-pull system eliminates "ground" or hissing noises, permits full definition of the various shadings of volume, and greater fidelity. The sound waves are halved into two separate and symmetrical sound tracks, one negative and the other positive, automatically eliminating the black unused portions of the sound track on which dust particles and scratches cause noisiness. The immediate application of push-pull is to the recording field rather than to reproduction in the theatre; it is particularly valuable in making the master negative from which the necessary re-recordings to standard track may later be made. However during the past year one of the major picture companies released two of its roadshow feature pictures with the push-pull sound track. A minor change was necessary on the projection equipment to accommodate the double sound track.

I believe the trend will definitely turn to a general adoption of this type of track as soon as some of the distribution problems are worked out. In that case, only a simple modification is necessary on existing equipment to reproduce the new track.

The ultra-violet light system eliminates the unnatural lisping and hissing effects which have marred the speaking voices of many talking picture stars, and improves the quality of musical reproduction. High-quality sound in motion pictures has become largely a problem of photographing as faithfully as possible a picture of the original sound. Ordinary white light as used in the recording process is composed of a great many different wave-lengths. It is impracticable to focus all of these wave-lengths exactly at one time, and those of them that are even slightly out of focus, blur the edges of the sound picture and introduce distortion. Additional distortion results when the light penetrates too deeply into the film emulsion and scatters. RCA Photophone engineers discovered that by restricting the light focused on the film negative to a narrow band in the ultra-violet range, it was possible to focus the lenses better and control the penetration of the light on the emulsion.

The advent of the improved sound pictures in the coming year will be of great importance to the theatre owner. It has already been demonstrated that good sound makes for "good box-office." Formerly recording engineers have had to hold down the volume range on the negative in order not to "overshoot" and distort. The new recordings change all this. Theatres will therefore require greater power to handle the climactic moments that highspot the pictures, without distortion. This means high-quality amplifier systems.

The year 1936 witnessed another great technical contribution to better sound in the theatre with the introduction of the cellular type of loudspeaker. High frequency sound in the upper registers are highly directional. Thus with ordinary speakers the best sound reproduction is heard in a direct beam from the center of the screen. The multi-cellular construction of the new horns insure a uniform distribution of both the high and low tones to every part of the auditorium. The past year also witnessed the universal recognition of the importance of the rotary stabilizer as a part of the soundhead movement of the film past the reproducing photoelectric cell and eliminates the distortion which film flutter and speed variations formerly caused.

There is every indication that in the coming year the major motion picture studios will cooperate in establishing uniform recording standards in keeping with the new and improved sound technique. Motion picture producers are spending vast sums of money to improve their product in every technical respect, of which sound is only one important part. It is natural to expect, therefore, that suitably high sound reproducing standards should also be established for theatres so that these great expenditures will not have been in vain.

NEW STANDARDS

By C. W. BUNN

Electrical Research Products, Inc.

MORE THAN twenty thousand theatres throughout the world look to Hollywood as a source of constantly improving sound motion picture entertainment—and the producers are keenly aware of this responsibility. As proof of their alertness, witness the many factors involved in sound production practice which have undergone radical changes during the past year.

C. W. Bunn

The process of re-recording, for example, has been vastly simplified through the adoption of machines designed specifically for this highly specialized function. Printing, too, has received much attention and modern practice calls for special "pre-equalizing" to compensate for the losses of the higher frequencies normally experienced in transferring the negative sound image to the release print.

As a result of these and similar changes, the release print frequency range has been greatly extended with a marked potential increase in both naturalness and presence, or the illusion of sound depth. But probably the most important and spectacular change brought about in 1936 has been the marked increase in the use of dramatic sound effects. Earthquake scenes, violent explosions, crashing buildings and similar massive sound values all were made possible commercially last year by virtue of modifications in the speed of noise reduction unit operation, changes in the geometry of the light valve "slit" and refinements in film processing.

Reproducing equipment is now available to the exhibitor by means of which he can avail himself of the full technical advantage provided by the new product and at a cost ridiculously low compared with the prices of yesterday. Reproducer sets have been refined until they challenge the finest of Hollywood's recording machines. Amplifiers are available that not only transmit the complete audible spectrum, but that are capable of delivering sound energy equalling the original in intensity. And in the new di-phonic loudspeaker, which forms a part of Western Electric's new Mirrophonic sound system, a radiating mechanism is found that, within the limits of a monaural sound system, approaches the ultimate.

The exhibitor has been entirely justified in his exacting demands of Hollywood, but this interest in the production phases of the business should not be permitted to obscure the possibilities of increased boxoffice dollars to be found in completely modernized projection facilities.

COMMENT ON PROJECTION AFFAIRS

. . including discussions by readers and answers to inquires

A COMMON PROBLEM IN SCREEN ILLUMINATION

AN OLD AND much-argued question is raised in a letter received the other day from Francis E. Hersey, chief projectionist of the Elsinore theatre in Elsinore, Calif. It is: How much light best serves the needs of projection?

I have many times said, and still do say, that it is not feasible to set up any standard of screen brightness, as measured in lamberts or foot-candles, unless a rigid standard is set up to govern not only auditorium illumination, but everything that can reflect light to the screen or into the eyes of the audience—in other words, a general standard of auditorium light level—inasmuch as a motion picture image has effect only because of contrasting shades of light, which means very much more than merely the amount of light reflected from the screen.

Brother Hersey tells me that because of the observation that there is a tendency toward dense films, and also because of the expectancy of more color films in the near future, the management of his theatre is considering the replacement of low-intensity lamps which have seen seven years service, with lamps for suprex type carbons.

His view is that the new type lamp will not supply too much light and can readily give more light when and if it is needed. The management has been advised, however, that suprex arc lamps will supply too much light, and it has been suggested that the present lamps be replaced with new low-intensity lamps with 10½-inch mirrors.

"Am I wrong, or are they?" asks Hersey. He gives the following data concerning the conditions:

Screen image, 16 feet, 8 inches. Projection distance, 86 feet. Screen masked dead black. Distance from last row of main floor to screen, 58 feet; from last balcony row, 94 feet. Width of seating area, 52 feet at front, 58 feet rear. Top balcony seats about 20 feet above screen center. Screen kept dusted, and is three and half months old. Hersey inquires further:

"If suprex arc lamps should be installed and the light proved to be too much, could not the auditorium illumination be increased to neutralize the screen brightness?"

The problem presented is of a common type, and an absolutely correct answer is not easily to be arrived at (it belongs to a group of problems concerning which our engineering bodies have been slow in developing data on). Here we have an image 16 feet, 8 inches wide masked a dead black. The masking tends to increase screen brightness and also compensates somewhat for the drop-off of brightness from screen center to edges. The viewing distances require no very brilliant illumination for rear seat patrons of normal eyesight to see image details, even though a highly diffusive screen surface is necessary.

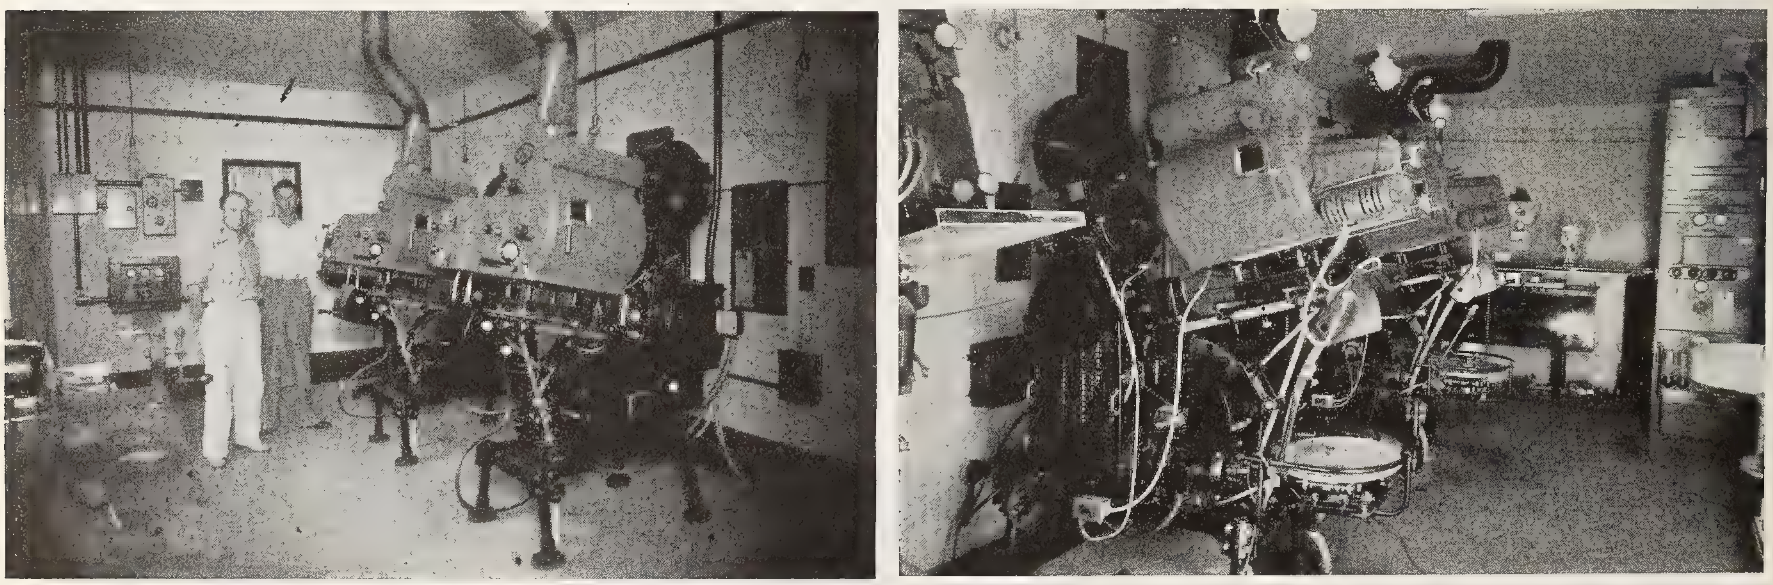
Under these conditions, a light source of medium power should suffice, provided the light source is properly adjusted, the projector optical system well selected, aligned and cleaned, the screen has good reflection characteristics, and provided the auditorium illumination does not interfere. Now this man Hersey is obviously a chap who knows his job, and I think the management of the Elsinore would do well to rely upon him pretty much for a decision. I cannot determine procedure in a case of this kind at this distance. I will, however, make a few suggestions.

The suprex arc is well suited to auditoriums having the conditions found in the Elsimore, and it gives a light of better quality than that obtained from low-intensity light sources. For regular films, a five-six carbon combination could be used, and when the feature film is in color or is unusually dense, the combination could be changed to six-seven.

It occurs to me that the supply dealer from whom the lamps were to be purchased might be willing to install a low intensity lamp equipped with a 10½-inch reflector on one projector, and a suprex arc type on the other for a day or two, so that decision could be based on actual tests.

INTERFERENCE FROM AIR VIBRATION

JERRY GAGE, projectionist of the Globe theatre in Betram, Texas, writes, "I have been employed in this theatre since it opened in August, 1935.



Two projection rooms which recently were partially re-equipped. The left-hand view is of the projection quarters of the 800-seat Ruffin theatre in Covington, Tenn., owned and operated by W. F. Ruffin. The projectors have new Brenkert Enarc lamps, installed by the Monarch Theatre Supply Company of Memphis. They are supplied by a new Roth motor-generator set. Projectors are Simplex, while sound is Western Electric. Shown in their place of busines are Paul Harrington, chief projectionist, and his assistant, Walton Bonds. The projection room of the Starland theatre in Winnipeg, Manitoba, is shown in the other picture. These projectors also have new Brenkert Enarc lamps, installed by Western Theatres, Ltd., of which J. Miles is president. The lamps are supplied by a Crompton-Parkinson motor-generator set (manufactured in England). The Starland has 1500 seats; the throw is 106 feet.

Have something that has been a problem, and still is. Have not asked advice for the reason that I wanted to eliminate it myself, but to date nothing I have been able to think of has helped. Here is the problem:

"In all but very dark scenes there is a visible effect that I do not believe could be classed as a flicker. Have you ever noticed on a hot day how the heat waves are reflected above a sheet iron roof? Well, that is exactly the effect. It shows up on both old and new film and film that is dirty or oily or clean."

You have, in effect, stated the answer yourself, I think. Unless I am in error, somewhere between your observation ports and the screen is a radiator, or some opening from which comes hot air, and it is that hot air that causes the effect you describe. I have had quite a few inquiries of the same sort during winter months, and always that was the answer. If such radiators or openings exist, cover them over and you may find the trouble ended.

TAPPING IN NEW MAGNET TYPE MONITOR

E. G. WIESELMANN of Wieselmann Theatres, Palisades, Col., writes, "The reason for this being my first letter to you seeking advice is not that I have not many times needed it. Heretofore I have always consulted you through the medium of your splendid Bluebook of Projection, and it is what you say in the book about matching speakers that causes this letter.

"In one of my theatres we are attempting to hook in a permanent magnet type speaker to be used as a projection room monitor. The stage speaker in use has an 8-ohm voice coil. The amplifier output transformer has six taps, providing for the following combinations: 1-2, giving 4 ohms; 1-3, 8 ohms; 1-4, 12 ohms; 1-5, 16 ohms; 1-6, 500 ohms.

"We have tried various methods of hooking this extra speaker in, with both good and bad results. The present hookup is as follows: The 8-ohm voice coil of the stage speaker across taps 1 and 3; the 2-ohm voice coil of the monitor coupled through a transformer, having 8 ohms on the primary and 2 ohms on the secondary, also to taps 1 and 3. To my mind this is not correct, although there is no apparent impairment of sound quality from the stage speaker. However, it is my desire to be absolutely correct, therefore I ask: How would you hook the speakers up? The stage speaker is not of the permanent magnet type."

The engineering department of Erpi, to which I referred this question, replies, "The question of loudspeaker connections depends somewhat upon the relative amounts of electrical speech power required by the stage and monitor speakers to provide adequate acoustic volume.

"If, for example, the projection room monitor speaker requires almost the same amount of power as does the stage speaker, in order that proper acoustic output be provided, then the stage speaker (8 ohms) should be connected across taps 1-2 (4 ohms) of the amplifier output. PRESSURE CONSUMPTION IN AN ELECTRIC CIRCUIT

FROM W. W. GILREATH of Austin, Texas, comes this interesting criticism and analysis:

"I find that either P. and L. Felt did not make their meaning clear in answering Question No. 47 of the 'Bluebook School' in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, or else they are confused. They said, 'We are told that in, for example, the lamp filament, all pressure (voltage) is consumed. Yet under overload both wires of a circuit become heated on both sides of the load. Query: If all pressure is consumed in the load, what shoves the current along the conductor on the no-load side, and often with sufficient force to heat the conductor?'

"I think probably the 'no-load' is a typographical error, since at no-load no current flows, hence the conductors will not heat. It is not claimed that all pressure is consumed in the lamp or 'load,' but that all pressure not consumed in some other part of the circuit is consumed in the lamp or 'load.' In short, in any closed circuit the algebraic sum of all potential drops and potential rises will be equal to zero.

"A brief discussion of the accompanying diagram will answer this problem, as well as perhaps some others. Examining the diagram, let us assume it to represent a circuit extending from a transformer out in the alley, to points AB located on the theatre stage, and that the installing electricians have extended this circuit from points AB to points CD, the latter located in the front of the theatre, and has there connected points CD with an incandescent lamp of low wattage.

another across points CD, the voltage will register exactly the same at both points, disregarding the extremely slight current flow through the instruments themselves. An ammeter connected in at any point between AB and CD will register nil—no current flowing.

"But if we now close switch S, the lamp instantly lights and the ammeter registers current flow equal to the lamp capacity, whereupon, if we have extremely sensitive voltmeters, we shall find the one at CD to register less voltage than the one at AB. True, the difference caused by the low wattage lamp will be small, but it will exist just as surely as a fly lighting upon a massive steel beam will cause a deflection.

"Let us now examine into the causes of lowered voltage at CD. As we know, a definite voltage pressure is delivered at points AB, a portion of which is used up or employed in forcing the current through the wires to points AB. A tiny part is used up in forcing current through the ammeter resistance, a tiny bit to force it through switch S, some to force it through the lamp terminals, some (a lot) to force it through the lamp terminal, and the remainder to force it through the wire back to the transformer.

"Every inch of wire and every item of equipment the current must flow through in making its circuit from A to B demands its share of the power represented by voltage pressure. If the wires have ample capacity, the difference of reading between the two voltmeters will be very small. For practical purposes we may say the voltage applied at AB is the voltage applied to the lamp, but nevertheless that is not true, for reasons before cited.

"Now let us substitute a lamp of sufficiently greater wattage so that the circuit is overloaded. There then will be a very considerable difference of registration between the two voltmeters. The temperature of the circuit wires will rise, perhaps quite high, by reason of the fact that a considerable amount of voltage is being used to force the current through their resistance, and this used energy is transformed into heat, which same must be thrown off or dissipated, which may only be done with sufficient rapidity if there be a considerable amount of radiating surface. Under such a condition, neither the lamp nor the circuit as a whole will operate efficiently, as may readily be understood, the heat generated representing loss of power. The lamp itself will be inefficient because it will not receive proper voltage.

"Perhaps all this may seem very elementary and unnecessarily long to many of your readers, Brother Richardson, but it should be remembered how very mystifying all this elementary stuff was to us not so long ago.

"There is one more thing in this general connection I would like to bring out; namely, most electrical apparatus must have the ability to radiate a considerable amount of heat, which calls for ample radiating surface if it is to be well done. The present trend in design is for economy of material. This of course means less bulky apparatus, which in its turn calls for necessarily higher operating temperature per watt of power generated or consumed. Under this condition, it is always possible that with a poorly designed terminal arrangement, both receiving and outgoing wires close to the machine may be heated by conductance from the apparatus itself. This is especially true if there is any overloading of the apparatus.

"It then behooves those who wish for truly efficient operation to watch their step when selecting equipments, demanding at least some guarantee of maximum operating temperature at maximum load, which may be given so long as the conditions under which the machine must operate are known."

SUGGESTING 2000-FOOT REEL TERMINOLOGY

G. PARK WEAVER, senior projectionist of the Ace theatre in Wilmington, Del., writes, "In this neighborhood house we welcome the 2000-foot reels. We look forward to the time when all features and comedies will be mounted upon them. May we make a suggestion in this connection, that the present terminology be continued with reference to reel footage, continuing to regard the term reel or part as meaning 1000 feet of film. In other words, when an 8000-foot production is spoken of, it should still be designated as an 8-reel production.

"This idea might be very properly extended by marking the first 2000-foot reel 'Part 1-2,' or 'Part 1-2' at beginning, and 'End Part 1-2' at the end, that marking being followed throughout the production, as 'Part 3-4,' 'Part 5-6,' etc.

"Why? Well, as an example, just recently when threading up, knowing that Part 5-6 should be in order, imagine my consternation when my assistant handed me Part 3! As another example, take a 3000-foot comedy or featurette. Will it be known as a three-reel subject, as of old, or will we term it a 1½-reeler? I raise this question at this time because of the fact that we almost certainly will have the 1000-foot shorts indefinitely, if not always; also the features may not all be mounted on 2000-foot reels for quite some while yet. To avoid complications and misunderstandings, some definite nomenclature should be established, adopted, and by the trade press brought into universal use."

A CLOCK SYSTEM FOR BUSY PATRONS

ON A TRIP to Rochester, N. Y., recently, I noted in a theatre in one of the cities in which I stopped, an arrangement that might well be adopted quite generally. On the wall were two clocks, side by side; one gave the correct time and was so labeled; the other was set at the time the show then running would be through, the latter clock being a dummy.

Now why would it not be a good plan to place a clock beside the ticket booth, or in its window, with another real clock beside it, set ahead of the first by just the length of the show, with the first placarded "Correct Time," and with a sign beneath both reading, "If you go in now you can see the entire show and leave at ———," with an arrow pointing to the second clock.

Time indicating provisions of this kind would be highly appreciated by patrons of many theatres, I believe, particularly those in business sections, where patrons frequently have "gone to the movies" while on a shopping trip, waiting for an appointment, etc.

IF YOU EVER EXPECT TO SHOW COLOR PICTURES—

With the greatly improved methods of producing color films, more and more color pictures are going to be available. To project these films, however, you need Cinephor projection lens—the lens which is corrected to project on to the screen, all of the color, tone and value the film possesses.

Then, too, with a Cinephor Lens, you can be sure of obtaining the clear detail, better contract and excellent definition of image that subconsciously impresses your patrons with the quality of your pictures and your house.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer inquiries pertaining to preliminary considerations in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticism. Working plans, hoever, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

THE QUESTION:

I WANT ideas as to how to properly decorate walls of a new theatre. I want panel designs, etc.—L.D.W.

THE ANSWER:

IF YOU WANT a panel design, I presume that you have in mind drape panels. If walls are to be covered with sound absorbing boards or wood-grained sheetrock, the spacing between the panels will be the standard lengths of the materials used. The spacing between top of panels and the length of same is also figured according to standard widths. This is done, so as not to waste any material.

The casing around panels is usually made of wood 6 inches wide and neatly moulded. If drapes are to be used, the background of the panels need not be finished. If panel design in painting is desired, you should consult your decorator, as by seeing actual conditions, he will be able to execute this in proper proportions.

THE QUESTION:

I AM PLANNING to erect a concrete building to accommodate a theatre on a lot 40 feet by 100 feet. Building will have a full concrete basement. Would you kindly advise me as to the ideal height of auditorium ceiling and as to the most practical arrangement of stage, screen, box office, lobby, foyer, rest rooms, seats and slope of floor. Also, what would be the most ideal size of screen?—R.W.

THE ANSWER:

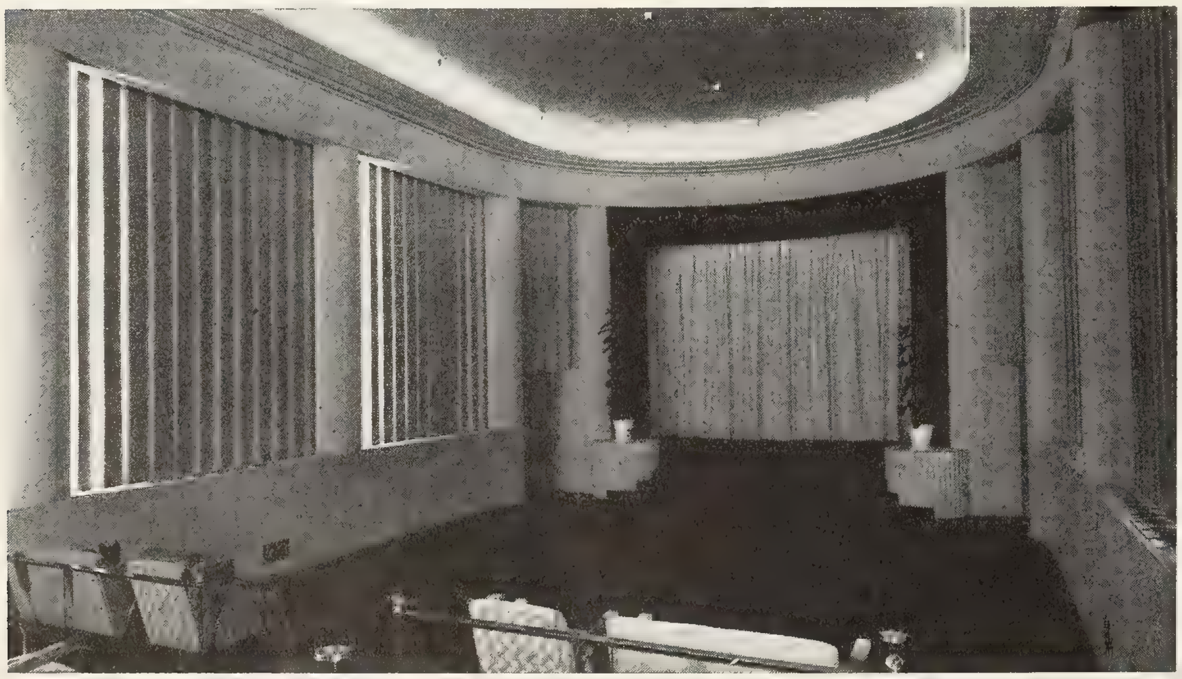
IF NO BALCONY is to be incorporated in your plans, the ceiling height at the high point of auditorium floor should be not less than 17 feet. The proscenium arch should be 24 feet wide, and the screen should be set back as far as possible, about 3 feet 6 inches from rear stage wall. Plans for flare walls on a 45° angle on each side of proscenium, the exits on each side of stage to be placed in same.

Place ticket booth between entrance doors, and set doors flush with back of ticket booth, so that they will not project beyond face of building when open.

Lobby should be at least 10 feet deep. This will provide space for women's and men's rooms on each side of lobby. These rooms should be entered from foyer. Width of foyer should be not less than 8 feet.

Seating should be arranged with a center bank of 12 seats, with an aisle on each side, and two wall banks of three seats each. The slope of floor should not be less than 4 feet.

The largest screen you can use in your theatre will be 13.5 x 18.7, and we believe projection experts would advise one much smaller than that—probably one with a width in the neighborhood of 12 feet.



Suggestion for an "intimate theatre" auditorium? This is the interesting studio-theatre recently installed at the Warner plant for private previews. Lighting is from vertical troughs behind fluted wall panels, and from ceiling coves.

THE QUESTION:

WE ARE contemplating remodeling a building 100 feet long, 22 feet wide and 18 feet high, into a theatre. This has to be done as cheaply as possible, yet we want to get the maximum in seating and also would like to get as much flash as possible into the front.

We plan on raising the floor and using ramps in some way on the way into the auditorium.—G.H.A.

THE ANSWER:

TO OBTAIN the largest seating capacity in a theatre 20 feet wide, a center aisle should be used. This will give five seats on each side of the aisle. After deducting the necessary space required for platform, lobby and foyer, there will be space left for 25 rows of seats, making the total seating capacity 250 seats. The floor slope should not be less than 3 feet 6 inches.

To obtain a good flashy exterior economically, cover front wall with structural glass or porcelain enamel, using color in some neat pattern. Design the ticket booth with entrance doors on each side as one unit. Provide neatly designed and illuminated recessed poster cabinets, also a well designed marquee incorporating lighting in color and silhouette letter attraction boards.

To obtain a nice interior at the lowest cost possible, cover walls and ceiling with sound absorbing tiles or boards. This material does not require decorating. The use of drape panels on side walls will also add to a pleasant atmosphere.

THE QUESTION:

WE ARE contemplating building a new theatre. Size of lot is 64 x 100 feet. Want to have two small stores on each side of lobby in order to help reduce rent. What would be the best seating arrangement, to get maximum seating capacity, without building on balcony?

On account of high water in spring of the year, only 2 feet in depth can be excavated, which would mean that the heating room would have to be built on the main floor.—M.W.M.

THE ANSWER:

THE MOST economical seating arrangement for a theatre 64 feet wide would be a center bank of 14 seats across with aisle on each side, and two wall banks, each of 7 seats across. There will be some waste space, as a building 60 feet wide is the proper width for such a seating arrangement. I am not familiar with your state code, so you had better find out if more than 14 seats may be used in a section with an aisle on each side, and more than 7 seats in section with an aisle on one side only. If it is not permissible, use wider seats, as the suggested arrangement is figured on the use of 20-inch seats. Or you could reduce the width of the building.

After deducting spaces for lobby, foyer and stage, or apron, there will be left room for 25 rows of seats, making the total seating capacity 700.

As you state that you experience trouble on account of high water in the spring of the year, be sure to have the auditorium floor and foundation walls waterproofed. The heating room will also have to be built above high water level. This room may be built on side or rear of stage. If an oil burner is to be used, the space required for this room may be very small.

THE QUESTION:

COULD YOU give me an idea as to cost and equipment of a new building for theatre? Have a lot in mind 50 feet wide, 70 feet long. Would like to equip it as reasonable as possible—not expensive materials. It's located in a small town, and can get same built if the price does not run too high. I would want a concrete floor, used seats or cheap new ones, new machines, screen, air purifying machine, heating plant (oil or coal), etc.

Could I get 420 seats in this space, or could I put in 450 with two more rooms added? Would you kindly advise me on cost of building and furnishing?—W.C.H.

THE ANSWER:

THE COST of the theatre, as described by you, will be about $16,000. This includes general contract, plumbing, heating, ventilating, electric wiring, painting and decorating. The equipment you mentioned will cost from $7,500 up, according to the kind and quality of each item selected. Most of the chair manufacturers would be able to supply you with reconditioned used chairs at a low price, if you prefer them.

Looking over your sketch, I find that 20 rows spaced 30 feet from back to back will bring the front row of seats rather close to the screen, as the lobby should be at least 10 feet deep. This can be easily remedied, as you can obtain more seats across the width of of the auditorium than shown on your sketch. I suggest that you

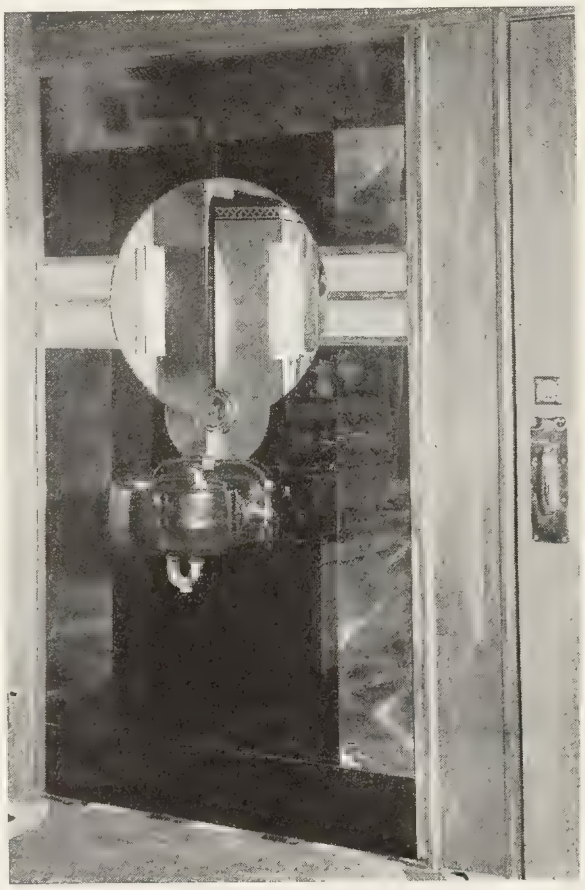
Drinking Fountains Harmonizing With Modern Interiors

IN THESE DAYS of built-in, rather than added-to, facilities, the usual stock type of drinking fountain, with its conventional earthenware bowl, seldom fits into the physical scheme of a theatre interior, and if the theatre is of strictly modern interior treatment, it probably never does. As a result, architects themselves frequently take the designing of such elements as candy dispensing equipment and drinking fountains into their hands, so that they are sure to achieve in their conception a harmonious whole.



Illustrated here, however, is a type of fountain standardized by one manufacturer—the Voigt Company of Philadelphia—as equipment suited to the modern interior scheme. It is designed to set in recess, and provides a mirror and in general is of ornamental character. Lumiline lamps are set against the circular mirror to supply illumination. The fount bowl is of black vitreous china, and valve and bubbler, which is of stream ejector type, are of chromium. The water ejector is equipped with a guard to give further protection against contamination. The fountain is available with complete electrical and plumbing equipment for installation by local labor.

methods generally is necessary. Lighting, and especially motion picture auditorium lighting, is usually inadequately thought of only as direct or indirect lighting, whereas it should be considered as confined spot, outline or panel as against overall surface lighting. All of these terms need clarification.

It is commonly believed that the use of indirect light overcomes all objectional features of auditorium lighting because, as in the case of indirect light, the source of light (the lamp itself) is concealed, and only reflected light from the surrounding surfaces is depended upon. It is true that the glare of the lamp itself is thus eliminated, but equally important objectionable features may yet remain. If the elimination of glare were the only factor, it would be more efficient to conceal the lamp behind a material having suitable translucence, such as glass or one of the modern synthetic materials.

OVERALL LIGHTING

Overall surface lighting is lighting which is fairly evenly distributed over a predominantly large ceiling or wall surface. This lighting can be achieved by either the direct or indirect methods, the indirect being the more economical to install and maintain where low intensity is desired, as in a motion picture auditorium. It should be noted here, though, that direct lighting properly designed for this type of illumination could be highly complementary, and in no way be disturbing to the pictorial values of the screen performance, whereas it is possible that certain forms of indirect lighting may be most objectionable, particularly if they are developed as confined spot, outline or panel lighting.

LOCALIZED LIGHT

Confined spot, outline or panel lighting is lighting which leaves isolated areas of light against a comparatively dark background. It may be from a direct or indirect lighting fixture, or a border of concealed lights within or surrounding a panel; or it may be panels of light separated by unlighted margins, the effect being that of alternate dark and light areas. Even though the light areas may be subdued in intensity and color, this method of lighting is annoying to the spectator because the isolated areas of light within his range of vision compete with the screen. An entire side wall may be evenly and completely illuminated to about as much as 2 foot-candles and not interfere as much with the screen as a small 6-watt lighting fixture isolated on a dark wall surface. A large theatre recently erected in New York has a side wall treatment of lighting panels separated by dark vertical bands. On account of the alternate dark and light areas, the lighting, if used at all, is dimmed down to such an extent that it is rendered almost useless (see diagrams).

Greatest care should be taken to avoid spotty or alternate lighting areas on the surfaces which come within the range of audience vision. Advantage should be taken of all wall and ceiling surfaces which do not come within the range of vision for placing of otherwise objectionable isolated areas of light that yet are desirable for economic reasons.

METHODS OF APPLYING

Effect lighting outlined above, unlike presentation lighting, needs the play which isolated and alternating shades of light will offer. It is effective to use the general presentation lighting by means of dimmer controls and varied colors to obtain the alternate dark and light and shading effects. Footlights, concealed overhead lights, and spotlights and stereopticons in the projection room, are all part of this lighting scheme and should, whenever economics indicate, be reduced in favor of suitable general presentation lighting.

Emergency lighting is the lighting which must be on during the whole performance at all times, whether the general presentation lighting is being used or not. While the purpose of this lighting is chiefly a practical one, that of supplying sufficient light for patrons to move about safely at all times, its effect must be considered part of the aesthetic character of the interior. It must not, as stated before in the case of presentation lighting, compete with the screen, and it must present a pleasing architectural effect when on by itself or used in conjunction with other lighting.

Emergency lighting has been very poorly applied in the past, the method largely used being the objectionable application of isolated wall or ceiling fixtures annoyingly intruding along the line of vision. In designing emergency lighting, advantage should be taken of surfaces not within the patrons' line of vision for the placing of the sources. A generous amount of aisle lights on chair standards, and lowbuilt-in light boxes at all stairs and changes in levels are most advisable. They tend to cut down the amount of light necessary at higher levels.

A very good scheme for emergency light would be an indirect line of light very close to the floor which would light the floor properly, so arranged that at the same time it threw a soft glow of light upward on to the wall.

MR. CULLMAN DISCUSSES LIVE AND DEAD ISSUES

MR. HOWARD S. CULLMAN, trustee of the Roxy theatre, New York City, invites attention to an address he delivered last week in a motion picture course at New York University. Although at times we have despaired of satisfying Mr. Cullman's robust appetite for public attention this is one occasion when despite his only incidental connection with the motion picture business it will be a pleasure to accommodate.

It may be, relative to the address with which we are here concerned, that we should point our remarks to Mr. Cullman's ghost-writer because, admittedly, it is difficult to conceive of a person of Mr. Cullman's present connection and previous association taking of his own initiative the attitude assumed in the lecture which bears the significant title, "Propaganda or Profits." But it seems undeniable that on the one occasion of delivering it at least the manuscript must have been read by the accredited author. So it seems reasonable to conclude that Mr. Cullman accepts responsibility for it.

That which challenges attention in Mr. Cullman's address is by no means novel or original. It is the familiar patter enunciated vociferously at the slightest provocation by the prophets of the New Social Order. The striking thing is to find Mr. Cullman, who might be mistaken as a representative executive of the motion picture industry, carrying this banner.

MR. CULLMAN'S address pecks away assiduously, behind a smoke-screen of sociological terms and the chatter of Union Square, at several fundamental policies of the American motion picture industry. He speaks of "social awareness" as being a distinguishing mark of our times, admitting of general discussion of various sociological, economic and political questions. He then rises to lament that the motion picture is not fulfilling the mission of a propagandist in the espousal of causes arising out of these questions. Here he displays an ignorance on a point which is probably well understood by any usher in the theatre temporarily under his direction; namely, that the function of the theatrical motion picture is entertainment—not propaganda.

Superciliously Mr. Cullman states that perhaps some explanation of the errant policy of the industry may be found in an examination of the Production Code of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. He says that there should be reasonable expectation that this code would reveal the producers' attitude toward "the important questions of the day." And what does he find?

"Upon careful scrutiny of this interesting manifesto," he says, "we find that it has little or no relation to the special problems of our age, being concerned entirely with our moral rather than our social attitudes.

"Thus it embraces such topics as Crimes Against the Law, Sex, Vulgarity, Obscenity, Dances, Profanity, Costume, Religion, National Fellings, Titles, and Repellant Subjects. . . . This document therefore leads us to believe that the movies are concerned with protecting our sensibilities rather than stirring our social conscience."

MR. CULLMAN should perhaps be congratulated on his perception in so quickly discovering that the Production Code is not a platform of political, social and economic policies. Having discovered this it is unfortunate that his quest did not lead him to learn also that the code as an industry policy is not concerned mainly in protecting the public's "sensibilities" unless by that word persons in The New Social Order mean what old-fashioned people still refer to as Lawful Conduct, Morality and Decency.

With evident contempt of what the Production Code stands for, Mr. Cullman continues:

"Thus we are safeguarded from detailed views of brutal killings and from complete nudity or lecherous notice thereof by characters on the screen. Our eyes will be spared scenes showing a disrespectful treatment of the Flag, the illegal use of drugs and seduction as an attractive pastime. Illicit amours will never be treated as comic themes nor will custard pies be thrown at ministers of the clergy. We get no detailed pointers on the technique of safecracking, the branding of animals, surgical operations, arson or white slavery.

"As we peruse the detailed prohibitions of the Hays manifesto, it is distressing to realize that in spite of all these precautions such phenomena as crime and disrespect for the American Home still persist in our national life.

"Certainly, we cannot blame the movies for this," continues Mr. Cullman and, making plain where he stands, "unless we harbor the disloyal thought that the perpetual glorification of the properties produces a sinister reaction.

"Although there may be some doubt about the result we

Test Cases

Chance games, during the six years in which they have grown to their present stature, have accumulated a mass of conflicting rulings and decisions, ranging from state supreme court decisions to opinions by municipal police and legal authorities. In spite of these it is impossible to determine the legal status of the giveaways even in those states in which high courts have handed down decisions in test cases. Bank Night, the leader in the field, has been the subject of most of the decisions.

A resume of litigation and a list, alphabetical by states, of important decisions bearing on the subject are given in the story starting on page 16.

License Step-Up

Chicago exhibitors this week pondered glumly over information that the city council is shortly to fix at 50 per cent the promised increase in theatre license fees, to be effective July 1, computing resultant increase in city revenues at $100,000 annually and arguing that Chicago fees already are higher than those charged in New York and other large cities. Concurrently, the police department assigned an officer to duty in each theatre during operating hours with instructions to keep lobbies and aisles clear at all times, duties normally discharged by the fireman regularly stationed in each cinema.

Golden at Monogram

Edward A. Golden this week resigned as head of sales for Chesterfield and Invincible Pictures to rejoin Monogram Pictures as general sales manager, a position he held for quite some time up until a short while ago. Mr. Golden became general sales head of Republic Pictures when Monogram merged with that company and with the revival of the latter organization by W. Ray Johnston, president, he returnes to his former desk.

Details of Monogram's production plans also are found on page 56.

Spearing Dies

James O. Spearing, first motion picture editor of the New York Times, and automobile editor of the same newspaper, died at his Manhatttan home last Saturday of pneumonia. Mr. Spearing, who was 49, had been ill only two days. He had been with the paper over 20 years, leaving it twice to join production staffs in Hollywood, first with Universal and later with Paramount. He also assisted Clyde Elliott in making "Devil Tiger" for Fox in 1934.

See page 21.

Italian Regulations

The official consent of American motion picture distributors to the new financial and quota regulations to govern the importation of films into Italy, and the withdrawal of revenues obtained from these pictures, was received in Rome this week. At the same time, the quota on films imported into the country was set at 250, a number reported to have been satisfactory to the American companies.

British Financing

While British financing is growing more conservative, money is as readily available as ever for definitely solid film projects, despite the furore caused on the weekend by appearance of "scare stories" in three London newspapers to the effect that production financing had collapsed, stories just as promptly branded as untrue by three other newspapers. One possible result seen is encouragement for governmental supervision of the industry as recommended in the Moyne Report.

Fox and the Courts

The financial troubles of William Fox, being revealed in a bankruptcy hearing in Atlantic City with repercussions in half a dozen different courts, were added to this week when Hiram Steelman, trustee in receivership, asked the United States Supreme court to set aside an injunction restraining him from starting suit against All-Continent Corporation. All-Continent is owned by Mr. Fox's wife and daughters and his creditors claim that it is a concealed asset.

The legal convolutions are reviewed on page 42.

Paramount Profit

Wall Street this week reported that Paramount Pictures' net profit for the fourth quarter was expected to approximate $2.80 per share on the 1,610,452 shares of common stock outstanding, or approximately $4,500,000. If the reports are borne out, the company's 1936 earnings would approximate $6,500,000 despite a second quarter loss of $476,000. Dividend action on the common is also looked for in the near future but the company's second preferred shares are still in arrears for 1936.

RKO Organizations

Affairs of RKO and the Orpheum circuit proceeded this week with the filing of an order in Federal court denying a motion for the substitution of new counsel for the Orpheum circuit. It was indicated early in the week that the first hearing of RKO creditors on the reorganization plan, scheduled for Thursday, would be postponed.

Details are on page 22.

Roxy Plan

A reorganization plan for the Roxy Theatre Company, New York, was released to stockholders this week and January 29th has been set for the first public hearing on the plan.

Details of the capitalization proposed are on page 50.

Salaries and Taxes

The motion picture's higher-bracket salaries are subject to federal and state taxes averaging 46 per cent of the income and in one case as high as 65 per cent, leaving salary figures at a much smaller net income than those gross figures given so much attention in the public press last week when the government made them public in Washington. Mae West, as the highest paid figure was credited with a salary of $480,833 for 1935. Of this normal income tax charges of the state of California and the federal government are estimated at $312,554, leaving a net income of $162,279.

Other estimated net incomes, as well as a list of the industry salaries over $50,000 for 1935, are found on page 19.

Exhibitor Meetings

At meetings of exhibitor organizations this week a proposal for Sunday motion picture shows in Delaware was deferred, regular monthly luncheon sessions were inaugurated in Seattle, and the first annual convention of the Hollywood Independent Theatre Owners was set for January 25th.

The story is on page 56.

Allied Elections

All offices of the national Allied States Association are subject to election on January 22nd, at the annual directors' meeting, to be held at the Emerson hotel in Baltimore.

The first outline of Allied conference business appears on page 40.

4½ Billion Admissions

The United States Government estimates that 4,500,000,000 admissions to theatres in 1936 grossed $1,000,000,000 at theatre box offices, and that 500 theatres were built at a cost of $27,000,000, increasing the total investment in the business to $2,027,000,000. At the same time the Bureau of Census started to release a series of reports on theatre earnings and theatre salaries paid.

Details of both reports start on page 41.

$30,000,000 Budget

Paramount executives of both production and distribution branches met in Los Angeles last weekend and set a $30,000,000 budget for filming in the next 12 months.

A report on the conference appears on page 64.

Legislation

The opening of Congress was the signal for the introduction of more than 2,500 bills, most of which will be quickly forgotten but many of which will be made the law of the land before the summer. Among them were some directed at the motion picture industry, which has an interest also in the proposals for federal control of industry in general.

A legislative story is on page 17.

Ostrer Silent

Isidore Ostrer, returning this week to New York from Miami, said that he has not given any thought to the matter of the establishment of a separate exchange system by Gaumont British in this country.

Mr. Ostrer's comment is quoted on page 22.

RKO Radio Accepts

RKO Radio Pictures, fifth distributor to reply to the request for a ten point trade practice program offered by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has agreed to allow an unconditional ten per cent cancellation privilege and approves the establishment of local conciliation boards.

Trade practice news is on page 21.

must at least admit that the movies are trying to make us respectable. This basic tenet, however, casts no light on the attitude of the films toward the vital issues of the day."

PERHAPS it should be explained to Mr. Cullman that to a great many people the matter of respectability has not as yet become a dead issue.

Then, proceeding in his address, as if to say that his previous remarks were all in fun, Mr. Cullman declares:

"However, as a matter of well established policy the screen avoids controversial topics."

He deprecates this policy and attributes it to the "usual code of business expediency," perhaps being reminded at this point of the criticism occasioned by the character of some of the advertising used by the theatre under his direction. At another point he applies to the screen the language which the Kremlin philosophers use in their reference to Religion. He says, " . . . the movies stand convicted of being an analgesic to the social conscience and potential unrest of the masses."

Apparently deploring that "such a procedure is not practicable in a society such as ours although it is the logical result of a planned economy without a profit motive," Mr. Cullman explains:

"In Russia, where the screen is utilized as a means of proletarian education, the profit motive has been eliminated and the public is being schooled to regard the films as a source of education rather than simple entertainment. Thus workers' clubs and citizens' advisory committees in Russia participate in serious discussions with the makers of films, with a view to gaining a general understanding of the objectives of the producers and the regime they represent."

ALTHOUGH we have noted published statements of Soviet film leaders which declare that Soviet films are now being made for entertainment and not for propaganda, we shall not undertake to question Mr. Cullman's competency to interpret the current Russian film policy.

We are not concerned here with what political, social and economic beliefs Mr. Cullman as an individual may or may not entertain. We are not interested in his private opinion of the industry's policy of decency in entertainment. We do not challenge his right to mount the soapbox and campaign for the motion picture to become a propagandist for whatever he believes will prove a betterment in the social and economic order. But we think that he may properly be reminded that his position as trustee of the Roxy theatre may be construed as involving a responsibility also to the industry of which that theatre is a part.

We insist that this latter responsibility is violated when in an open address and in subsequent publicity he sneers at the industry policy of decency in entertainment and charges, in effect, that the avoidance of propaganda and insistence upon the entertainment motive is a fraud.

It is not out of such boring from within that the prestige and good-will of the motion picture and the industry can be maintained before the American public.

CHANCE GAMES IN LEGAL TANGLE IN HALF OF STATES

Adjudged Within the Law in Lower Court Decisions in Five States; Barred by the U. S. Postoffice Department

Upheld in Seven High State Courts, and Outlawed as a Form of Gambling in Four Others; Rulings Outlined

Chance games, after six years of operation, are tangled in such a morass of litigation in at least half of the states of the Union that it is impossible to determine from day to day their legal status even in some states where the highest courts have given decisions in test cases, due to new presentations on disputed points.

Bank Night, cash giveaway devised in 1931 by a Denver film booker and one of the many plans designed with the hope of cicumventing municipal and state anti-lottery laws, has outstripped all its rivals in helping theatre managers to cool the something for nothing fever of their patrons. It is conducted at least once a week in an estimated 6,000 theatres throughout the land in spite of repeated arrests, convictions and acquittals on appeal.

Chance games divert from the motion picture industry an annual amount estimated variously up to many millions.

Bank Night's popularity rose steadily until 1935, and its rapid spread since that year has made it almost continuously the subject of conflicting court rulings and legal opinions rendered by state, county and municipal authorities. In the last two years the issue of whether or not the plan is a lottery has been argued in eleven high state courts. In seven of these it has been upheld; in four it has been outlawed as a form of gambling. In five other states the giveaway plan has been adjudged within the law in lower court decisions.

Courts of appeal have declared the game illegal in Georgia and Louisiana, as have the supreme courts of Kansas and Texas, but in New York two decisions handed down by the highest state tribunal have placed the plan within the borders of the law. Its legality has been upheld also in the supreme courts of Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Massachussetts, New Hampshire and Tennessee. Favorable decisions have resulted from cases in the lower courts of Connecticut, Illinois, Missouri, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin in addition to other rulings in those states in which the higher court rulings on the point have superseded the others and set precedents.

Never Federally Barred

Although disfavor has been voiced by federal authorities, Bank Night has not been banned by a federal court decision. In four cases which have reached United States district courts the point at issue has been not the fact of whether or not the scheme is a lottery but whether its copyright has been infringed. In three of the cases Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., owner of the copyright, was denied protection and in only one, in North Carolina, did it win its point.

Important court decisions and opinions rendered by state attorneys general bearing on the legality of Bank Night and other chance games under anti-lottery laws, which have been handed down in the last two years, are listed alphabetically by states on the following page.

Federal courts in Maine and Massachusetts ruled that no copyright infringement was possible and in Denver, Col., a federal judge declared in his decision on a copyright infringement case that Bank Night was so closely akin to a lottery that it was not entitled to protection under the copyright law.

A ruling first promulgated by the Postoffice Department in May, 1935, and since reiterated on several occasions, holds that cash giveaways constitute lotteries and that as such, newspapers or periodicals carrying advertisements for them would be barred from the mails. Postmasters in several states have announced that this ban will hold regardless of state court decisions.

Devised in 1931

Although many varieties of cash giveaways have sprung up, called variously Screeno, Banko, Parlay Cash Night, Ten-O-Win, Dart, Jack Pot or Gold Mine, none has achieved the wide-spread use and legal success of Bank Night. The project was devised in 1931 by Charles Urban Yaeger, then a booker for Fox Colorado theatres, who, in company with a group of Denver theatre men, formed Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., and copyrighted the book of instructions in Mexico and later in the United States.

The plan is sold to exhibitors under franchise for from $5 to $50 a week according to the capacity of the theatre. The exhibitor is provided with a book of instructions, a registration book and a ledger containing numbered slips. On the night of the drawing the ledger containing the numbers is torn up and the numbered slips are placed in a container on the stage. A number is drawn and the patron's name under the corresponding number in the registration book is announced. If the prize is not claimed within a certain time limit it remains standing, to be added to for the next drawing.

Registration Book a Factor

Important in the legal vindication of the plan in most instances in which it has reached the courts is the fact that the exhibitor is instructed to place the registration book in the outside lobby of the theatre where patrons may list their names for participation without buying a ticket of admission. Thus consideration, or price of participation, one of the three elements necessary under the definition of a lottery in the anti-gambling codes of most states, is not present. The accepted legal definition of a lottery is prize distribution in which prize, chance and consideration are present.

In some cases legal opponents of the plan have argued that the plan is obviously a promotion scheme and that the plea that a person does not have to purchase a ticket of admission to the theatre in order to participate is an untenable legal fiction. The elusiveness of the plan, even in the face of this argument, has been proved in several instances, notably in a decision of the Massachusetts supreme court last July that the indirect advantage to a theatre of larger attendance is not in itself a price paid by the participants.

The general trend of most of the court decisions rendered to date on the subject is that the device of allowing anyone to register for the drawings, places the plan within the law. Its alleged closeness to the borderline is indicated in many of the rulings. The latest decision from the New York State court of appeals allowed the legality of Bank Night by a four to three vote of the justices and the majority opinion indicated that the ruling would have been reversed if the defendant had limited the drawing to those who had purchasd tickets.

Now Occupies Two-Story Building

Supported by these decisions, the parent company has expanded to a large scale industry. Mr. Yaeger continues as president of Affiliated Enterprises and Rick Ricketson, manager of Fox Intermountain Theatres, is his partner. The company started in two small office rooms in Denver and it now occupies a two story office building on film row in that city. Included in its holdings are a half dozen theatres, a printing company, a film trailer company and Divvy, another giveaway plan.

Last June the company held a convention in Denver which was attended by 200 salesmen and distributors of the plan. At that meeting it was announced that more than 4,000 theatres were using Bank Night. That figure since has been increased to more than 6,000, according to representatives of the company. Salesmen are reported to be paid a commission of 30 per cent.

Municipal authorities have waged an almost continuous campaign to ban the games and in many cases they have had the support of legal opinions from city and state attorneys. Their fight was begun more than two years ago when in Ohio a forgotten statute was found which enabled patrons who objected to the game to sue for the return of their admission and

INJUNCTION DISSOLVED IN CHICAGO

$50 in damages. The courts refused to uphold the authorities in a test case and the games continued except in Cincinnati, where the police won a case in municipal court when a judge declared Sweepstakes, another form of chance game, was gambling and hence illegal.

Prohibitions in other cases have failed to hold up in courts or attorneys-general have been forced to retract their opinion when test cases have failed. Even in Georgia, Louisiana, Kansas and Texas, where high state courts have banned theatre chance games as gambling, the issue is not entirely clear and exhibitors and premium exponents are planning further legal battles.

Injunction Dissolved

Determined action against chance games in any form in theatres is now being waged in Chicago, where an injunction restraining police from interfering has been dissolved, and in California, where Attorney-General U. S. Webb ruled this week that cash giveaways in any form are lotteries and therefore illegal in the state.

The superior court in Chicago in a decision handed down on Monday dealt a body blow to chance games in that city and ended a chapter in a month-old fight against giveaways by dissolving the temporary injunction obtained last week by the Iris theatre to prevent police interference with the operation of the games. Intervening petitions, signed by 33 additional theatres, under which the games had been resumed after several arrests had been made, also are affected by the ruling.

The court held that Bank Night is a violation of a city ordinance which prohibits chance drawings. He upheld the ordinance which the plaintiffs maintained was unconstitutional.

Circuits and independent operators in the city immediately stopped the games since their operation would result in the loss of the offending theatre's license. A. D. Adcock, attorney for the Iris and for Bank Night distributors, indicated that he would take the case to the state supreme court.

The city did not fight Bank Night as a lottery but introduced the chance games law, making it more difficult for the theatres to fight the case.

Theatre managers were surprised at the sudden change in the tide of the legal battle. A conference held last week between the exhibitors and Mayor Edward Kelly was believed to have resulted in an agreement that the games would be allowed to continue in a modified form. A few days later more summons were given out by police, acting under an opinion given by Corporation Counsel Barnet Hodes, and on Monday the injunction was dissolved.

On Wednesday Judge Niemeyer granted a certificate of importance enabling attorneys for the 34 theatres involved to appeal directly to the Illinois supreme court from his ruling. Mr. Adcock said that the appeal would be filed in time for the April term of the supreme court.

Says They're Lotteries

The California ruling was released by Attorney-General Webb in response to a query from the Modesto district attorney's office, but it is not known whether protests against the games have been received. Mr. Webb said that the cash giveaways, as employed at present in the state, constitute lotteries because payment is made, through purchase of a ticket, for the chance to win. So far judicial reviews in California of Screeno, Bank Night and similar games have been few. All on record have been decided in favor of the theatre operators.

In Boston this week it was reported doubtful that the appeal for a rehearing of the infringement suit brought against Parlay Cash Night by Bank Night will be allowed by the United States circuit court of appeals. The court ruled last month that the Bank Night plan and similar cash giveaways are public property and therefore cannot be infringed.

PREMIUM EXPERT QUOTES INCREASE

Howard W. Dunk, independent consultant in sales promotion plans predicated on the use of premiums, said this week that in 29 years the premium business in all forms as used by American business has increased from an annual expenditure of $25,000,000 to $500,000,000. This does not include theatre chance games but does include all other forms of theatre premiums.

Mr. Dunk has been associated with the largest operators in the premium field for the last 25 years and for 10 years has been secretary of the Premium Advertising Association of America.

Ray Coffin, distributor for Affiliated Enterprises in Des Moines, pointed out this week that a ruling by former assistant Attorney-General Walter Maley of Iowa outlawing Bank Night as a lottery, and quoted last week in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has been superseded by a decision of the Iowa supreme court establishing the legality of the plan in that state.

In New Orleans, the state court of appeals, which a month ago outlawed Bank Night, has refused to rehear the case.

FILMS AMONG SUBJECTS INVOLVED IN 2,500 BILLS BEFORE CONGRESS

Representative Culkin Presents Two Measures; One To Ban Block Booking; Unfair Trade Practice Subject of Another

Hope of Revision in Taxes on Admissions Obscured; Patman Abandons Attempt to Regulate Film Industry; State Issues

Laboring under the burden of more than 2,500 measures introduced as Senate and House were called to order, the Seventy-fifth Congress faces the difficult task of enacting into permanent legislation those parts of President Roosevelt's emergency program which he wishes to carry over.

The President's desires as to legislation were outlined in his annual message, delivered January 6, and the financial program for the fiscal year beginning July 1, as it appears now, was disclosed in the budget message submitted January 8.

Approximately 2,500 bills and resolutions were introduced on the opening day. Only a very small percentage of these measures will ever receive serious consideration, and only a fraction of those considered will get as far as a vote on the floor.

Among the bills affecting the motion picture industry which were submitted at the opening of the session were measures by Representative Culkin of New York, one of them setting up a commission for the purpose of protecting the industry from unfair trade practices and monopoly and for the settlement of trade controversies, the other banning block bookings.

Senator Duffy of Wisconsin announced that he would introduce his copyright legislation, which was adopted by the last Senate but failed to receive action in the House.

Other bills which will go in practically the same form as last session will be the alien actor measures of Representative Dickstein of New York and Kramer of California, the latter carrying a provision for reciprocal exchange with countries which permit the entry of American artists; the Pettengill block booking bill, and the Sirovich copyright bill.

Patman Has New Bill

Abandoning all thought of attempting to regulate the motion picture industry, Representative Wright Patman of Texas, co-author of the Robinson-Patman anti-price discrimination act, announced on January 9 that his new bill, prohibiting manufacturers from engaging in retail distribution, will not include producer-exhibitors.

Although he contended that the motion picture industry needed regulation, Mr. Patman said that he considered pictures a means of communication rather than a commodity and that it would require a special campaign, which he is not prepared to undertake, to secure legislation.

As originally prepared for introduction, the Congressman's bill included a provision that exhibition should be considered retailing.

While the Texas Representative voiced the expectation that some move would be made during the session to divorce production from exhibition, he indicated that he would not be the spearhead of such a drive, feeling that he had enough to do in connection with his own measure. Films, he said, present "a different problem that must be handled separately."

Quenching all hopes for a return to the old $3 exemption for admission taxes after next June, Mr. Rosevelt submitted with his budget message statements showing that the Treasury anticipates a return of not less than $20,800,000 from the admission tax during the 1938 fiscal year, which begins July 1, next. If, on that date, the present 40-cent exemption were abandoned, it was shown, the revenue would be reduced by $15,240,000.

The motion picture was not a legislative subject in Congress alone, many state and municipal legislatures turning their attention filmwise in connection with new statutes or the revision of old ones.

Tax measures affecting the industry have appeared in the California legislature. One calls for repeal of the sales tax, with the understanding that income and other taxes would be raised to fill the revenue gap, and that real estate would be assessed at its actual value. Another bill calls for a five-day 40-hour week for all workers in the state.

The amusement tax levy adopted in Savannah, Ga., last week was reconsidered by the City Council and a committee appointed to study the subject following threats by the Lucas and Jenkins circuit to close its local houses if the tax was enforced. The tax was a ten per cent gross levy designed to raise relief funds. John J. Bouhan, attorney for Lucas and Jenkins, told the City Council that the circuit pays taxes on $300,000 worth of real estate in the city, has a payroll of $65,000 and employs 125 people. He urged that a tax not be "saddled on one industry."

Governor Lloyd C. Stark of Missouri is expected to recommend to the state General Assembly that the sales tax rate be increased from one to two per cent. The additional revenue will be used for old-age pensions and unemployment relief.

Continuing requirements for unemployment relief in Pennsylvania will serve as the chief argument for the re-enactment of the amusement tax in that state during the new session of the legislature. The tax of one cent on each 25 cent admission was scheduled to expire July 22, 1937.

A bill has been introduced in the Alabama legislature to amend the revenue act so as to permit theatres to deduct from their gross receipts amounts paid to the state for licenses.

Sunday Shows Weighed

Sunday shows are still the subject of legislative action, referenda and petitions in several localities. In Waynesboro, Va., theatre openings on the Sabbath have been legalized by a vote of 344 to 294.

An initiative petition seeking a change in the city ordinance of Greenwood, Miss., to allow Sunday shows has been rejected by the City Council. The Council took the position that it could not legalize action which violated the state laws.

Hartford, Conn., theatres in a recent lobby poll obtained signatures of 34,000 patrons who registered in favor of 2 o'clock opening on Sunday afternoon instead of 5 o'clock as at present.

Dedicate Warner Theatre

The new Warners Sheridan theatre, located at 6217 Georgia Avenue, N.W., Washington, was to be dedicated this Thursday with Ernest H. Pullman, president of the Manor Park Citizens Association, accepting the house as the latest addition to the city's entertainment mediums. The Sheridan will be the 15th theatre operated in Washington by Warners and the 36th in the Washington zone directed by John J. Payette.

"Advice" on "Alcazar" Film Called Belied by Facts

Plummer Takes to Task Writer's Fear of "Glorifying" Defenders

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER

Until October last the correspondent in Spain for Motion Picture Herald, Motion Picture Daily and the other Quigley Publications, with headquarters at the Hotel Ritz, Barcelona, the writer of this article spent three years in Spain and Spanish Morocco. Successively at Tangier and Tetuan, at Sevilla and at Barcelona, he had the editorial and business representation of the European edition of the New York Herald-Tribune (Paris) and Automotive Industries (Philadelphia). Following the July revolt, he filled an emergency job at the American consulate general in Barcelona.

Fear is expressed by a correspondent of a British motion picture journal that the forthcoming Twentieth Century-Fox production of "The Siege of the Alcazar," at Toledo, may "glorify" the military defenders of Spain's historic citadel. In an open letter to the producer, Darryil F. Zanuck, he adds a coat of mud to the encrustation of clotted blood, dust and mortar with which the surviving soldiers came forth when finally they were relieved by "Moors, the riff-raff of the Foreign Legion, Nazis and Italians." The besiegers, it seems, were just righteously indignant "home folks" of Toledo City.

In phrases that are a weird compound of effusive compliment and threatening insult to the man and to his profession, he cautions Producer Zanuck against picturing the defense of the Alcazar with any remotest suggestion of that stoical bravery and deathless chivalry which were in constant evidence during the siege.

14-Foot Walls and Bare Hands

Throwing military considerations to the four winds, the voluntary editor, as "a scenarist," outdoes Hollywood's most illogical and most improbable script by injecting a lurid sex theme and motive. "The Siege of the Alcazar" was really a big "lark" of the nationalist soldiery. Insured against attack or capture by walls of 14-foot thickness, they simply stocked up with the munition stores of an entire province and abundant victuals and, kidnapping some helpless maidens of the ancient city, settled down to a picnic of indefinite duration, accompanied by some of their own women folk. The while without the angry citizens, armed only with blunderbusses, fowling-pieces, sticks — and profanity — proceeded to the attack, only to be mowed down by machine-gun fire from the mighty fortress. Casual mention is made of "the giant walls crmbling beneath simple miners" dynamite and the bare hands of the wronged populace."

What the "scenarist" has failed to take into account is that not only the Fox Movietone, allied with Mr. Zanuck's producing organization, but the Anarcho-Syndicalist-Communist-Socialist coalition's own propaganda filming unit "shot" the Alcazar siege in its progressive stages. The operations without the walls, as caught by their own cameras, as caught by Fox Movietone's, revealed an altogether different story.

Modern, high-power rifles and machine-guns were shown. These were imported from France, Russia, Czecho-Slovakia and manned by "volunteers" from the Red hordes of those lands standing shoulder to shoulder with Spaniards, mostly from other parts of the Peninsula. These sustained the attack until the "simple miners" were hustled south from Oviedo, as far from Toledo as Pittsburgh is from New York, or Los Angeles from San Francisco, to apply their dynamite charges. The relieving army corps in the main were Spaniards, but they included Moors and a sprinkling of Germans, Italians and Portuguese.

No Alternative

The military leaders of Spain occasionally may blunder. But they are not mentally deficient. None but an army of congenital idiots would voluntarily get themselves into, or would voluntarily allow themselves to be gotten into, a situation such as the "scenarist" has pictured. Hopelessly outnumbered by their attackers, they had no alternative but to seek refuge in what hitherto had been one of the most impregnable of strongholds.

Many of their wives, mothers, sisters, daughters they took with them to guard against the very contingency the "scenarist" would write into Mr. Zanuck's film, but with the "shoe on the other foot." If any women besieged in the Alcazar, unrelated to the defenders, were brought or coaxed thither, it may be gambled that they came of their own volition. Where a majority of woman kin of officer and soldier might be ensconced in a common place of siege, there one would not find families and "war brides" together. It is "just an old Spanish custom"—that doesn't exist. It doesn"t jibe with Spanish psychology.

Chiefly Spanish Citizens

The relieving Foreign Legion of Spain, unlike France's Legion d'Etrangers, was not a body composed of foreigners or aliens. In the main it was made up of bona fide Spanish citizens. The national army of the mainland, when the war broke out, was composed of young fellows from all over Spain, but mostly from rural districts—a clean, intelligent, generally well-behaved lot.

The Moors who are fighting with the nationalist armies in Spain almost to a man are descendants of the Moorish legions exiled from Granáda, Sevilla, Toledo, Córdoba, Málaga, in the time of Ferdinand and Isabella, who repaired to and founded such cities of the present Spanish Protectorate of Morocco as Tetuán, the capital, Larache, Alcazarquivír, Arcila, Xáuen and, in old Spanish Morocco, Ceuta and Melilla.

While Spain proper was repeatedly on the verge of revolt and civil strife, following the downfall of the monarchy, the Protectorate was completely under a military control and administration, which maintained absolute peace and a benign species of dictatorship. It would be called "Fascist" now. There one found an anomaly that might be encountered in few European colonial possessions, protectorates or mandated areas—that of a minority of Christians, or Gentiles, and a vast majority of Mohammedans and Jews living and working side by side and respecting each the rights, religion, properties and households of the other. The Moors from this region of government so superior to that of the mainland are now employed as supplementary forces in the Spanish armies exactly as, in a state of war—as in the World War, for example—the United States employs its colored citizens from Dixie and New York's Harlem, Indians from Idaho, Utah, Florida, Maine and Upper Michigan, and Eskimos from Alaska, and Porto Ricans. Subjects of Spain, the Moors are natural-born soldiers, famed for their hardihood and their qualities of endurance under fire and on forced marches.

Location Unit Check Used by Actors' Guild

The Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood has issued a virtual ultimatum to producers that they cannot take location companies into any of the coast territory from Canada to Mexico if the companies include players without union cards.

Although Guild executives have refused to issue official statements, this is known to be the means employed by the Guild to bring producers to terms without calling a general strike. The first definite indication of union surveillance of location companies occurred last Friday, when the Guild and the makeup union local pulled six Paramount stock players, two hairdressers and one wardrobe man off the location company working on "Souls at Sea" at San Pedro.

The players taken off were either non-Guild members or members who had not paid up their dues. It is understood that immediately a company leaves the studio, the troupe is subject to a systemized Guild checkup, in accordance with an order from the organization heads. Players pulled from the set are given the opportunity to join the Guild, it was learned. The Guild's location checkup has been in effect for the past month.

Reorganization Meeting Set for Educational

An order to Philip Cohen, special master, to hold a meeting of stockholders for the reorganization of Educational Pictures, Inc., within two weeks after January 24th, has been issued in Wilmington, Del., by Chancellor Josiah P. Wolcott. The order was issued upon the petition of the corporation to effect a compromise or arrangement with stockholders for an exchange of securities and for a reorganization.

*Estimated average of basic exemptions for unmarried individuals and heads of families. Does not include other deductions, allowable under the income tax laws, such as for donations to charity and for other taxes.

The estimated state income taxes listed here were computed in accordance with the Treasury Department classification of the returns as of New York or California.

The motion picture's higher-bracket salaries are subject to federal and state taxes averaging 46 per cent of the income, and, in the case of the highest paid stars, as high as 65 per cent.

The United States Government last week made public the salaries paid in 1935 to the leading stars, featured players, directors, writers and executives of the motion picture industry, causing the newspapers to conclude that the salary checks paid in and by the industry were many times higher than those received in any other business. The inroads made into these earnings by income taxes were not mentioned.

Illustrative of the heavy levies taken from those salaries are the gross and net earnings of 28 persons, representing as many taxation brackets, New York and California, who were given special press attention in headlines for receiving total gross salaries of $3,671,036 in 1935. These salaries were subjected to income taxes estimated at $1,712,967, representing a tax averaging 46 per cent of the total gross income.

In arriving at these percentages, exemptions of $2,500 in each case were taken from the taxable income in computing both the state and federal taxes. This is an estimated average of the basic deductible amount allowed both by the federal and state governments to married persons or to single persons who have dependents. No consideration was given to any other exemptions that may have been justifiably deducted from the taxable income under the income tax laws, such as deductions for charities, permissible expenses and other taxes paid.

According to Government reports, Mae West received $480,833 during 1935, thus making her the highest paid figure in motion pictures. But, the State of California taxed Miss West approximately $90,199 and the federal taxes on her salary were an estimated $239,855, thus leaving a net income of $168,279 instead of the figure quoted so prominently in the newspapers.

New York State is equally severe on high salaries. Winfield Sheehan, listed as a resident there, was reported to have been paid $344,230. The state took an estimated $27,088 and the United States an additional $174,249, to leave a net $140,393.

Also in the higher-bracket classification, but farther down the list, Ned E. Depinet, president of the RKO Distributing Corporation in New York, was credited with a salary of $72,224. Deduction of state and federal taxes shrunk that income to $49,214. In California, Ginger Rogers was reported to have drawn a gross salary of $74,483. State and federal tax deductions left her a net income of $50,890.

In the lowest classification of the higher-brackets is T. J. Hargrave, Eastman Kodak executive, who was paid $52,948. His net income, after taxes, amounted to $39,263. Myron Selznick received $52,000 during 1935 in California and after taxes his net was $37,250.

The Government disclosed gross incomes of some 220 film individuals whose salaries in 1935 were shown as ranging from the $480,833 of Mae West to the $25,000 income of Fred Allen for that year, which he was paid for appearing in "Thanks a Million" for Twentieth Century-Fox. Earnings of the 220 film persons were divided in the following brackets:

Salary	No. of Persons
$25,000 to $50,000	13
$25,001 to $75,000	79
$75,001 to $100,000	42
$100,001 to $125,000	30
$125,001 to $150,000	22
$150,001 to $175,000	14
$175,001 to $200,000	5
$200,001 to $250,000	8
$250,001 to $300,000	3

Thus, the two chief taxes affecting the higher-bracket salaries, exclusive of county, city and socalled "nuisance" taxes, which amount to another 10 per cent, reduce the net income to a third, and in some cases a fourth, of the gross income. Charlie Chaplin was reported to have been paid $216,000 and of this amount he would net approximately $90,814. Bing Crosby's income of $318,907 was reduced to about $95,000, and Gary Cooper's $261,138 to slightly over $100,000.

The tax problem, a source of aggravation in Hollywood for some time, has been accompanied even by threats of moving the industry to New York or Florida. United Artists, for example, went so far as to survey likely studio sites in Florida, where freedom from excess taxation was promised by state officials. Nothing was done after the election, however.

Warner Baxter, who was credited with having earned $203,000 in 1935, but out of that pays in excess of $100,000 in principal taxes, was philosophical about it all. "I have no sympathy with people who complain about high taxes," he was reported to have said. "It so happens I am earning only a percentage of what I received three and four years ago. It appears to me that we who earn top salaries should pay a greater percentage to the government than those who barely get along. For another thing, I consider myself fortunate in netting what I do."

Gary Cooper did not take this stand. "We're actually working for the Government," he was quoted. A similar view has been taken in recent months by other prominent figures such as Frank Capra, William Powell, Ronald Colman, Carole Lombard, Claudette Colman and Gregory LaCava, all of whom were reported to have limited the number of pictures they would make a year in order to keep their salaries out of the higher brackets and the corresponding steep tax levies. Mr. LaCava said he would limit himself to two feature productions a year, at a salary said to be $100,000 a picture, to avoid the higher taxes that more work would incur.

The North American Newspaper Alliance, in the columns of the New York Times, called fallacious the popular belief that salaries paid today are higher than they were in the early days of the motion picture. A review of past payrolls, said the article in the Times, showed that a headline star of today receives 25 to 10 per cent less than those of 20 years ago.

In 1916, Charlie Chaplin deserted the Essanay Studios in Chicago to work for Mutual Film Company at $650,000 a year. A few weeks later, Mary Pickford's contract with Famous Players-Lasky expired and she demanded more money than the Chaplin salary because, as she put it, "I'm making full-length features and he's only making two-reelers."

After several weeks of frantic negotiations, Adolph Zukor, then head of Famous Players, gave Miss Pickford a two-year contract for $1,040,000, plus a $300,000 bonus as well as numerous other concessions.

But William Farnum, also a star at this time, was paid $15,000 a week, and Tom Mix, in 1925, achieved $17,000 a week, plus a percentage of the net profits of his pictures.

Following is a list of individuals in the industry whose 1935 salaries were in the higher brackets according to the federal reports, along with the companies for which they worked:

NEW YORK STATE PAID FIFTH OF 1936 TAXES

New York State paid 22.24 per cent of all the internal revenue collections, amounting to $3,520,208,381, which were paid the federal government in the fiscal year of 1936, ended June 30, last, it was disclosed Monday in a report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in Washington.

With 10.07 per cent of the nation's population, New York State thus contributed more than one-fifth of the government's returns from internal taxes. The State of Pennsylvania was next, with $302,376,636, followed by North Carolina with $282,710,478. New Jersey was next with total revenues of $147,119,087 and Connecticut yielded the next highest figure, $48,243,506.

Total collections during the fiscal year 1936 amounted to $3,520,208,381, compared with $3,299,436,572 for the fiscal year 1935, an increase of $220,772,809, or 6.7 per cent.

RKO IS THE FIFTH DISTRIBUTOR TO ACCEPT TRADE PRACTICE PROGRAM

Agrees to Unconditional 10 Per Cent Cancellation Privilege and Approves of Local Conciliation Boards

RKO-Radio Pictures, fifth company to reply to the ten point trade practice program formulated by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has agreed to adopt an unconditional ten per cent cancellation privilege and approves establishment of local conciliation boards. No change in the company's established policy in regard to score charges, sale of short subjects or designation of preferred playing time was advanced in the letter of acceptance from Ned E. Depinet, RKO vice-president, to Edward Kuykendall, president of the exhibitor organization.

In Washington, where Congress is expected to take action immediately on legislation governing interstate commerce and the control of industry, it was reported that the expected measures for control will be modifications of an enlarged Federal Trade Commission. Further trade practice news included a report from Philadelphia that Loew's, Inc., may modify contracts with exhibitors on percentage pictures, the changes to affect the number of pictures to be played and not prices.

The RKO reply to the MPTOA trade practice program is the fifth to be made, Universal, United Artists, Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer having replied earlier. Statements from Paramount and Columbia have not been received and no declaration from Warner Brothers is expected.

The company defined its stand on the various points of the program as follows:

CANCELLATION: An unconditional minimum of ten per cent where all features offered are accepted by the exhibitor, but not applicable to pictures produced by others than RKO although distributed by that company.

LOCAL CONCILIATION BOARDS: Their establishment is approved.

CLEARANCE: The company opposes granting of unreasonable clearance but believes that uniform clearance and zoning plans are of doubtful legality.

OVERBUYING AND UNFAIR COMPETITION BETWEEN THEATRES: The company regards these as primarily exhibitor problems but it is willing to cooperate in their solution.

NON-THEATRICAL EXHIBITIONS: The company is emphatically opposed to these wherever they offer competition with established theatres.

STANDARD SHORT FORM OF CONTRACT: The standard form is regarded as inadvisable but the company agrees to attempt shortening and simplification of RKO's contract for the coming season.

SCORE CHARGES: Subject to negotiation between exhibitor and distributor.

DESIGNATION OF PREFERRED TIME: Subject to negotiation between exhibitor and distributor.

FORCING SHORTS WITH FEATURES: The distributor believes itself entitled to "a reasonable part" of the exhibitor's short subject playing time and will endeavor to obtain it.

Initial organization work in connection with the setting up of local conciliation boards probably will be launched with the arrival in New York of Mr. Kuykendall in about two weeks. The development of the boards is expected to call for final meetings of distribution executives at which the functions, jurisdiction, personnel and maintenance of the boards will be clarified. All five companies which have answered the MPTOA request for adoption of the ten point program have approved the conciliation boards and have promised to cooperate in their establishment.

Exhibitors in Philadelphia, Charlotte and Seattle already have designated exhibitor grievance committees and indications are that these may be converted into conciliation boards for those cities with the addition of distributor representatives.

Mr. Kuykendall has made public a letter to Al Lichtman, vice-president of Loew's, acknowledging that company's acceptance but regretting the company's stand on score charges and preferred playing time and asking an explanation of the cancellation privilege to be allowed.

Licensing Plan Seen

(Washington Bureau of the HERALD*)*

Industrial control legislation in the current session of Congress is expected to center largely on the O'Mahoney-Mead bill for the licensing of corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, included in which are a number of provisions directed at practices in the motion picture and other industries which were brought out by Congressional and Securities and Exchange Commision investigations.

Administration of the proposed law would be vested in the Federal Trade Commission, the membership of which would be increased from five to nine.

The legislation would require that every corporation engaged in commerce, directly or indirectly, secure a license from the commission on January 1, 1938. Such license would prohibit discrimination in pay against female workers performing services equivalent to those performed by male employees, would ban child labor, provide for collective bargaining and ban dishonest or fraudulent trade practices or unfair methods of competition. Whenever the commission found that abuses in the form of low wage scales existed in any industry, it would have authority to recommend minimum wages.

Drastic limitations on activities of corporations and their officers and directors are imposed in the bill. All stockholders are to have an equal right to vote at stockholders' meetings and non-voting stock would be outlawed, notwithstanding any provisions for the issue of such stock in the charters of corporations already established.

Philadelphia Dispute

Officials of Loew's, commenting on the exhibitor dispute in the Philadelphia territory, have indicated that the distributor may modify contracts with exhibitors on percentage pictures in those provisions affecting the number of pictures to be played. Provisions for the 40, 35 and 30 per cent films will be retained, but clauses pertaining to the number in each group may be changed to cover only pictures to be delivered.

In the current issue of Contact, the UMPTO bulletin, the Hirsh Amusement Company which operates the Pike, is charged with deserting the so-called united front against Loew's on percentage terms. The circuit recently purchased the 1936-37 product away from the Ritz, its centage terms. The circuit recently purchased stand that this move is one of the reasons for the high film rentals in the territory.

J. O. Spearing Dies; Editor and Critic

James O. Spearing, automobile editor and former motion picture editor of the New York Times, died at his home early last Saturday of pneumonia. Mr. Spearing, who was 49, had been at his desk in Times Square until Thursday night, when he left complaining of a cold.

He had been with the Times over a period of 23 years, leaving twice to become active in the motion picture industry. For three years, beginning in 1923, he was in Hollywood for Universal Pictures writing scenarios and adapting short stories and novels. Later he went to Paramount and after that he joined Clyde E. Elliott as a writer and general assistant when Mr. Elliott was engaged by Fox Films. His last screen story was "Devil Tiger," produced by Fox, in 1934.

Born in New Orleans, Mr. Spearing received his early education there and later graduated from the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., in 1909. After his graduation, he returned to New Orleans where he joined the staff of the Daily States. Shortly after he became a reporter of the New York City News Association. Mr. Spearing joined the staff of the Times in 1913 where he served as a reporter until 1918, when he was appointed the paper's first motion picture critic. An assistant to the city editor, in charge of suburban news, he began reviewing pictures aside from his regular work and as the film productions increased to proportions that warranted the establishment of a motion picture department, Mr. Spearing was appointed its head.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, mourning the death of Mr. Spearing, said:

"The motion picture industry notes with regret the passing of James Oliver Spearing. His effective usefulness in the early days, his constructive writing during his years as motion picture critic, his understanding of the problems of the art during that period, all helped point the way both for the industry's development and for his successors in similar service."

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Edna Mead Spearing, three sisters and a brother.

No Decision Made On GB Exchanges

Isidore Ostrer, president of Gaumont British, has made no decision on opening exchanges in this country, he said this week on his return to New York from Miami.

"I haven't given the matter any thought," the British executive said, "and I will not consider any such plan until I return to England."

In reference to the letter sent by Sidney R. Kent advising GB that the Twentieth Century-Fox exchanges could not physically handle other than GB product he said he had no knowledge of the matter other than that Arthur Lee, American vice-president of GB, had mentioned it.

"There has not been any change in our situation with Twentieth Cenutry-Fox since I left London," Mr. Ostrer said.

Mr. Isidore Ostrer and his brother, Maurice, sailed for London Wednesday.

See Acceptance of Orpheum Offer

The filling of an order in the United States district court in New York denying a motion for the substitution of new counsel for the Orpheum circuit trustee was taken this week as an indication that RKO's offer of $700,000 for the principal assets of the circuit will be accepted by creditors of the company.

D. M. Black, the present counsel, offered some time ago to resign in the event the RKO offer was refused. Orpheum creditors and Referee Oscar W. Ehrhorn are scheduled to pass upon the offer on January 25th.

Isidor J. Kresel, retained by the preferred stockholders of the Orpheum circuit, has filed a petition in Federal court for leave to intervene in the RKO proceedings.

MARTIN JOHNSON'S DEATH TAKES FIRST MAKER OF WILD ANIMAL FILM

Explorer Who Used Planes to Get Material for "Baboona" Is Killed in Crash of Passenger Craft; Wife Injured

Martin Johnson, explorer, photographer, lecturer and first motion picture producer of "wild animal" films for the commercial theatre screen, died Wednesday morning in the Good Samaritan hospital in Los Angeles of injuries received in an airplane crash Tuesday as he was flying as a passenger from Salt Lake City to keep a lecture engagement. He had suffered a cerebral concussion, fracture of the skull and multiple fractures of the jaw. Mrs. Osa Johnson, his wife, who had shared most of his adventures during their 26 years together, was in a nearby room of the hospital, with a fractured leg, when death came to her husband.

Of the eight other passengers and three members of the crew aboard the Western Air Express transport plane when it crashed into a mountain ridge 25 miles from the Los Angeles airport, in the third major air accident in that region in recent months, only one passenger, James Braden, of Cleveland, was killed instantly.

MR. and MRS. MARTIN JOHNSON

Opened Nickelodeons

Mr. Johnson was 53 years old, born at Rockford, Ill., and spent his boyhood at Independence, Kan.

He first became interested in motion pictures while sailing the South Seas with Jack London in 1906. On his return to America, in 1910, he married Osa Leighty, of Chanute, Kan., and a short while later they both opened a chain of nickelodeons in Southern Kansas. The Johnsons toured the western states and part of Canada showing their Jack London films, many times in lumber and mining camps using gas for illumination.

In 1912, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson went to the South Seas together and made their first feature picture, "Cannibals of the South Seas." Then, for several years, they cruised through the islands until they had visited and made photographs of every group in the South Pacific, making, the while, the features "Captured by Cannibals," "Head Hunters of Malekula" and "On the Borderland of Civilization." They next spent a year sailing around Australia and then had two years in Borneo making "Jungle Adventures." The next Johnson Expedition took them to the Malay States, Ceylon and Egypt, and out of these countries came the pictures "East of Suez," "The Suez Canal" and "Bessie the Adventuress."

Cannibal Becomes Friend

Africa was to be the next stopping place of the traveling photographers and the scene of their activities for the next decade. But, of their South Pacific trips, Terry Ramsaye, in his history of the motion picture, A Million and One Nights, says:

"Martin Johnson has been an important contributor of adventure pictures for more than a decade. His first contact with showmanship was as a bellboy carrying ice-water to John Ringling at the old Saratoga hotel in Chicago. When Jack London started to sail the Snark around the world, Martin Johnson shipped as cook. On a beach in the South Seas, Johnson became acquainted with the films through a camera carried by a Pathe expedition from Paris, which had missed connection with the 'round the world cruise of the U. S. Navy in '08. Johnson lectured over the Orpheum circuit on South Seas subjects on his return. He struck up an acquaintance with Martin Beck, leading to a connection with the Orpheum Travel Weekly, a one-reel film release edited by Johnson.

"Some years later Johnson sailed again for the South Seas to make cannibal pictures. This cruise came near to an ending down the Alimentary Canal, at the invitation of Chief Nagipate of Malekula. Despite that they became friends, although not as intimately associated as the chief first intended.

Projected on Fly Tent

"When Johnson returned to Malekula in 1919 he carried a projection machine and a set of cannibal pictures to show Nagipate. Johnson also edited a special prologue film for his royal showing, consisting of scenes of himself and Mrs. Johnson in a motor car on Fifth Avenue, supplemented with pictures of the Armistice Day crowds.

"This extraordinary production was projected on a fly tent in the Malekula jungle, while Johnson lectured to the squatting savages. He explained how the cheering throngs turned out to see him off on his journey and to send the greetings of America to the great Nagipate.

"The cannibals sat stolidly through the picture and, being accustomed to pay for their services, charged Johnson a case of trade tobacco for looking at the film. The showing was, however, a valuable contribution to the world peace movement. Chief Nagipate confidentially informed Johnson that he was surprised to see how many white people there were in the world and announced that he would abandon a long cherished plan to eat them all."

Authorities on Savage Peoples

At the beginning of their some 15 years of photographing African wild life, animal and native, Mr. Johnson's lack of finished motion picture technique was one of the reasons which brought him to Mr. Ramsaye, who assembled, cut, edited and polished for the commercial motion picture screens such of the Johnsons' early successes as "Martin Johnson's African Hunt" and "Simba." Books written by the Johnsons included "Camera Trails in Africa," "Safari," "Lion" and "Congorilla."

During their African stay, besides "Trailing African Wild Animals" and "Simba," they made such pictures as "Across the World" and "Congorilla," the first all-sound film to come out of Central Africa.

The most recent picture of the Johnsons was "Baboona," released through Fox in 1934-35 and, strangely enough, in view of the cause of Mr. Johnson's death, introduced the couple to airplane travel. Two Sikorsky Amphibians were used in traveling from place to place for photographic material, and it was during this trip that the exploring photographers themselves became proficient in handling the controls of an airplane.

Fire Over England

(UA-London-Pommer)

Historical Drama

With England's Queen Elizabeth as the central and dominating figure, "Fire over England" is a romance tinged historical drama. Welding imaginative speculation to authentic fact, it depicts the historical and political events and the personal relationships contingent thereupon that led to the destruction of the Spanish Armada. Expensively produced and convincingly played by the all-British cast, it gains its realism by sticking closely to naturally dramatic historical fact, and while these incidents endow the film with a stirring thrill action character, they are carefully controlled in order that they may not predominate too greatly over the personal romance and drama.

At the time of Francis Drake's raiding exploits, when England is a puny sea power, his harassing of Spanish treasure ships thrills the British populace. The Spanish Ambassador demands that Elizabeth capture and hang this pirate. Though her advisors beg her to do so, Elizabeth is made of sterner stuff and, trickily, she temporizes with King Philip of Spain. Word reaches England that Spain is building a mighty fleet with which to invade the island kingdom. A woman of many amours herself, Elizabeth dispatches Richard Ingolby and his son, Michael, in love with lady-in-waiting Cynthia, to Spain in search of information. Captured, Richard pleads for the life of his son before he is executed by the Inquisition. In Spain Elena falls in love with her father's prisoner. In England, jealous Elizabeth cannot spare Cynthia from her vengeful fury. Escaping from Spain with full knowledge of that country's naval plans, Michael arrives in England to find his homeland on the verge of panic. Only Elizabeth is courageous as her courtiers demand that she bow the knee to Philip. Riding into the military camp at Tilbury where the armed forces of Britain await the invasion, Elizabeth, idolized by her soldiers, conceives a daring plan to stay the might of Spain and finds in Michael just the sort of a desperate man to execute it. Heading a little fleet of tiny boats, carrying repatriated courtiers who must prove their loyalty, the boats are set afire as they approach the Armada. The wind carries the burning craft into the heart of the great fleet, spreading death and destruction, to drive the Armada's sailors into rout and start the amazing chain of events that leaves the great sea host a shattered wreck on every mile of the British coast. Out of Elizabeth's determination and Michael's daring heroism the first beginnings of England as a great sea power are made. Michael's reward is honors from Elizabeth and Cynthia's hand in marriage.

Although slow to start as much attention is given to establishing personnel identities and erecting the proper historical significance, the film builds to spectacular thrill action in the concluding reels. Differing from American technique, the British producers do not take such wide liberties with historical fact. A strict chronology that may seem complicated to the average audience, but which undoubtedly will be appreciated by students, is followed. Nevertheless, American director William K. Howard has worked into the script, action and production detail definite traces of those values which arouse devotees of domestic drama of adventure and romance.

Because comparatively few of the cast are in any great degree familiar to American audiences, it does not seem possible that one can place much dependence upon the strength of name values to sell the show. The problem thus resolves itself into the proposition of how ably the individual exhibitor can market a quality class production.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese theatre, Hollywood. For the first time in history, British production came into the film capital to give it the initial look at one of its pictures. A Korda picture, showing was attended by a large delegation of producers, directors, writers, actors and other Hollywood notables who had a professional interest in the film. As would be expected, this group showed enthusiasm for the picture. The run-of-the-mill preview fans, for whom an intensive advertising barrage had been laid down, seemed to experience difficulty in understanding the story until after the halfway point.—Gus McCarthy.

The inevitable after-the-show Hollywood sidewalk conference decorated the picture with verbal laurels, but it could not refrain from waxing facetious. It saw something whimsical in the fact that this British production was made by three Austrians, Alexander Korda, Estaphan Pallos and Lajos Biros, was directed by the American William K. Howard, photographed by the Hollywood Chinese James Wong Howe, that a Russian, Sergei Nolbandov, collaborated on the screen play, that another Russian, M. Meersen, was the art director, and that the French René Hubert designed the costumes.

Of course Mr. Pallos pointed out that many a Hollywood picture credit sheet would yield as cosmopolitan a pattern. Mr. Pallos says he feels more at home in Hollywood than anywhere else, since he travels with four passports and as many spellings of his name. In fact he is officially three other fellows.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

Penrod and Sam

(Warner)

Comedy Drama

The juvenile Booth Tarkington characters are there and very much of the delightful Tarkington atmosphere is retained, but smartly, recognizing that this is an attraction for youngsters of a new generation, the producers, writers and director have given it an up-to-date twist. The result is something to give the present day kids plenty of opportunity for enthusiasm. At the same time, particularly as it concerns the relation of Penrod Schofield and his father, it has a human interest character that should be of more than casual appeal to adults.

In the beginning Penrod, Sam and Verman, together with the rest of the gang who have formed a juvenile G-Man organization, still don't want to have anything to do with tattle tale Rodney Bitts. When Rodney, who abused Verman, lies to his father and says Penrod beat him up, the incident is reported to Mr. Schofield, who first chastises the boy, but later, when he learns the truth of the matter, commends Penrod. The incident has a pleasing human interest quality. Again the kids scrap and this time Schofield is fired by Britt.

Just as things look pretty bad for Penrod and his G-Men, gangsters led by Dude Hanson rob Britt's bank. In the raid, Verman's mother is killed. Following the gunbattle, the mobsters hide in the woods. Penrod and Sam call a meeting of their gang in the secret headquarters. But Dude's mobsters also move in to capture the two youngsters, along with Rodney who has blundered in. News of the capture is spread by Verman, who tips off the real G-men who surround the barn and trap the bandits. Rodney proves he is made of the same sort of heroic stuff as Penrod and Sam, and as the kids share the reward he is accepted as a full member and Mr. Schofield is reinstated in Britt's bank.

Previewed in the Warner Hollywood theatre. Following regular procedure the showing was at night with only a few kids in attendance. Had someone previewed it to a Saturday afternoon kid matinee, a better idea of how young folks will react to the film might have been gained.—G. M.

Larceny on the Air

(Republic)

Drama

Despite complications and sometimes hard to follow story intricacies, this topical drama emerges as satisfactory average entertainment. Generally well acted, directed and produced, the film, overcoming motivating handicaps, moves speedily, is held together by a well controlled vein of suspense, and effectively blends its action, dialogue and situations.

Young Doctor Baxter declares war on quack doctors who use the radio to advertise their worthless cure-alls. To his assistance comes McDonald, federal pure food and drug law agent. The activities of the two bring down the wrath of Kennedy, a leader in the sure-cure business. Baxter meets and falls in love with Jean Sterling, and, more by illusion than anything else, audiences are led to know that her father, Professor Sterling, a supposedly respectable publisher, is associated with Kennedy. Tense drama characterizing all activity, contrasted by comedy provided by Baxter's aide, Jimmy, Baxter's suspicions of Sterling are proved true. The knowledge causes a temporary romantic rift between the crusading doctor and Jean, but when she is convinced that Baxter actually knows the truth, they are reconciled. Through her influence, the professor is won over to Baxter's side. As the combined forces wage war on Watkin, a charge of murder is laid at Baxter's door. But to exonerate himself and break up the ring of grafters, he leads a wild auto chase over mountain roads to round up the real culprit and get the information that drives Watkin off the air.

The film permitting tieups with ethical doctors, makes possible the application of sensational ballyhoo to evoke popular interest.

Previewed in Warner Forum theatre, Los Angeles. Though the audience seemed to experience some difficulty in understanding certain story phases, it nevertheless reacted favorably to the presentation.—G. M.

Off to the Races

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

Comedy

Preceding numbers of the Jones American family series having met with a fair degree of popularity, there is good reason to anticipate that this, the fourth, will prove satisfactory and amusing entertainment for family type audiences. Meeting the expectancies of this patronage group, the show also places in his hands an attraction that the showman may get behind in an effort to capture the attention of other audience segments. With the contributions made to it by the young members of the cast it is a wholly satisfactory offering for the children; the manner in which its juvenile romantic contrast has been worked in should appeal to the grownup youngsters, and adults are assured of finding much in it featuring the adult cast members to arouse their attention.

The story is well written. Aiming to make comedy predominate, the direction is sure footed and understanding. With good material in situations and dialogue to work with, the cast performs with enthusiasm. Production support is of a higher degree than that of the preceding films.

Wholesome comedy, the essence of the story, is introduced and maintained in a novel way that prevents the film from being a stereotyped series affair. The familiar Jones Family, John, Mrs. John, Bennie, Jack, Roger, Lucy and Granny, are happily looking forward to county fair week. Sending his trotting horse first to be stabled in the garage by Mrs. Jones to the discomfort of John, Jack and Roger, Uncle George Baxter, a ne'er-do-well horseman, arrives with his brat daughter, Winnie Mae. This youngster makes things hot for the entire family, and Uncle George gets it in a real fix when he persuades Bonnie's boy friend, Herbert Simpson, to bet his marriage savings on Jerry B. Much fun concerning the horse and the personnel ensues—the preview audience laughed heartily. The big race is on. With Herbert's money and some of Granny's riding on it, Jerry B. wins the first heat. The excitement of the situation is comically intensified when one of the fair's midway attractions, kootch dancer Rosabelle, hears George's name broadcast over the loud speaker system. One of the wives to whom he owes back alimony, she demands that police pinch him until he pays up. The family fortunes menaced, a new threat appears when Winnie Mae announces that unless Uncle George is liberated, father John, somewhat of a sulky rider in his own right, will drive the second heat. This episode is a melange of comic, suspense laden action, but Jones, although he's almost the victim of dirty work, manages to drive Jerry B. to victory. The winnings refinancing Uncle George, the family is glad to be rid of him and Winnie Mae so that it can proceed about the business of marrying Bonnie to the now opulent Herbert.

Unlike some of its forerunners, "Off to the Races" is an attraction into which exhibitors may sink their teeth in an attempt to develop business above that which may be expected from the regular followers of the series.

Previewed in Uptown theatre on the Saturday following New Year's Day. The audience, very much in a holiday mood, reacted to the entertainment in a manner that seemed to surprise the studio crowd which was around to see how the film would take.—G. M.

A Man Betrayed

(Republic)

Melodrama

Modern melodrama made up of circumstances and incidents well within the province of probability is adroitly served up in this presentation of fraudulent stock operations and resultant complications. On the somber side there is a suicide made to seem a murder. Gunplay, pursuit and related violence are without lethal consequence and the story develops substantial comedy aspects as it progresses. A cast of dependables headed by Eddie Nugent and Lloyd Hughes maintains illusion of reality throughout.

The action begins with the attempt of an honest stock salesman to verify the authenticity of his merchandise and his employer's resultant suicide. Dishonest partners employ gangsters to disguise the death as a murder and cast suspicion on the salesman, who is convicted and sent to jail but rescued by chance when other gangsters effect escape of a felon to whom he is handcuffed. Free, he sets out, aided by a brother, to establish his innocence by determining the facts surrounding the death of his supposed victim.

Circumstances of his release throw him and his brother, a misionary who is also a boxer, into company of mobsters whose interest in his affairs is at first incidental but becomes genuine as the misionary brings them around to the side of justice. Under his influence the gangsters undertake to unravel the mystery which has defied the detectives and succeed in doing so, their success resulting ultimately in their reformation.

Distinctly novel treatment of subject matter is a major asset of the film. Plot factors are, as indicated, lively, colorful and logically connected. Acting is competent and of uniform quality.

Melody for Two

(Warner)

Musical Comedy - Drama

How to make the hero an unpleasant sort of person is expertly demonstrated in this production. That trick is the picture's most novel feature. Whether the idea has any entertainment or commercial value is open to question. The unimpressed preview audience didn't seem to have much of an opinion either way.

Generally the film seems to be some sort of an exhibition of how swing music came to be. The fact that just about everybody knows the circumstances deprives the story of any topical interest or surprise value that might be attached to the subject. However, via the route of music, orchestra and vocal, romantic conflict, comedy, light drama and spoiled boy melodrama, the attempt is made. As it develops, the music is pretty good and so is the comedy, which is more than can be said of the other elements.

Tod Weaver, by nature a cheap skate class band leader, gets in wrong with everybody when he refuses to pay for some arrangements. To preserve a swell job, his girl, Gale Starr, singer in the band, buys the arrangements secretly, and the orchestra clicks. Eventually the leader finds out about it, and with the aid of "Nobody can do that to me," he walks out of the job. Gale succeeds him and she's quite a sensation. The inevitable happens to the sulking, idle swell head, but eventually he is bludgeoned into leading a blonde girls' jazz band in a honky tonk. Business is tough until a darky janitor gives the outfit the idea of going in for swing music. Though Tod wants nothing to do with this terrible stuff, business is so good that additional space has to be taken to accommodate the crowds. Naturally the new phenomena wrecks the spot featuring Gale's band. All the way through this the conflicting romance is having its innings.

Then the bands go into competition for a radio broadcast job. Gale, who has every rea-

In the lead role, James Melton sings well, but fails to impress as an actor. Patricia Ellis has a couple of songs, but the outstanding entertainment feature of the show is Winifred Shaw's handling of her "Jose O'Neill, The Cuban Heel" song specialty. Other than that the comedy provided by Marie Wilson, Fred Keating and Charles Foy are the picture's most attractive elements.

Crack-Up

(20th Century-Fox)

Spy Melodrama

International intrigue of the kind that becomes front page news when exposed, but continues otherwise as routine business in the affairs of major nations watchful of each other in the matter of martial preparedness, is the subject of this commonsense but by no means commonplace melodrama. The topic is of especial interest at a time when war is not generally regarded as among the more improbable results of contemporary relationships.

Specifically concerned in the incidents here depicted is a plane capable of transporting passengers swiftly and safely between the United States and Berlin. Aside from the assumption that such a plane exists, the story sticks closely to the plausible. It is so constructed that there is no necessity for assuming a state of war or identifying the second nation involved in the plot. Things pictured as happening could happen and just possibly have.

Outstanding among the personnel is Peter Lorre as the secret agent of an unnamed foreign power, a characterization reminiscent of his role in the recent "Secret Agent." Secondary emphasis is upon Brian Donlevy as a disloyal American. Helen Wood and Thomas Beck carry a romantic interest closely bound up with the major theme.

The narrative depicts the foreign agent's masquerade as a slightly demented hanger-on about the flying field where a new and powerful plane is housed and his efforts to obtain, through bribery of employees, the plans from which the plane has been constructed. As success seems within his grasp developments precipitate murder, and circumstance places him aboard the plane in company with its inventor and pilot, its owner and an innocent relief pilot. The high point of the melodrama is reached when the plane comes down in midocean during a storm and the antagonistic quartet, faced with certain death, works out its destiny in such fashion as to effect the rescue of the innocent member and bring about the destruction of the plane and the plans for its duplication.

The Man in the Mirror

(Twickenham-British)

Comedy

This British picture is out of the rut in conception and execution, is most amusingly interpreted by a cast including two American values in Edward Everett Horton and Genevieve Tobin, and has been directed by Maurice Elvey with a fine eye for comedy situations. It is certainly one of those pictures from England which can be exploited successfully in America and which offers unusual opportunities, both in theme and incident.

The basic originality is one of idea. The situation presented is that of a shy and ineffective man, a "prune" in his own phrase, who suddenly is confronted with a materialization of his image in the mirror. This second man is all that the other would like to be.

Horton is a business man named Jeremy Dilke, who has allowed his partner, Talkington, to usurp all authority in the office, and at home, by his ineffective shyness, has disappointed his wife and allowed his mother-in-law to become a problem. After the second Jeremy Dilke materializes out of the mirror, things are altered. Talkington is put in his place. Mrs. Dilke rejoices that honeymoon days are here again. Jeremy number two—pushing number one into a cupboard when he is in the way, or leaving him to face the music after his double's flirtation with Mrs. Talkington—steps in on a big deal with an oriental potentate, finds that the potentate is bogus and his own partner double-crossing him, and makes a fortune in a nitrate deal. Face to face, the two Jeremys shake hands and merge into one.

There are many clever and amusing single incidents to exploit, one of the best being the burlesque of the Eastern magnate, who is really a practical joker in makeup. The shy Jeremy's escapade in a night club and his hotel stay under an assumed name, both planned by his double, are also very funny.

It went over to a gale of laughter at the night trade show, Piccadilly Theatre, and they said afterwards it was Twickenham's best to date, and certainly up to the very highest Horton level.—Allan, London.

Pigs Is Pigs

(Vitaphone)

Cleverly Done

The little pig of this fable is very much the greedy pig. Despite his fond mother's warning words to watch his diet, the smart youngster continues to gorge and then retires for the night. Comes eventually sleep, but also indigestion, in the shape of a nightmarish monster who insists on stuffing the piggie's stomach until it grows to something looking like a balloon. Surprisingly enough, when the young pig awakes, he promptly forgets his horrid dream and rushes pronto down to sate his apparently insatiable appetite, which perhaps only goes to prove why "pigs is pigs." The situations, particularly those picturing the dream sequence, are cleverly imagined, skillfully drawn and colored to fine comic effects. Running time, seven minutes.

Gold Mania

(RKO Radio)

Fair

A number of the World on Parade series, this subject concerns itself with an old time gold prospector and his search for the precious metal. With a mule and a dog and with all his worldly possessions in a small pack, this drifter of the land roams from day to day in the hope of spotting gold in some stream or desert wasteland. Running time, 11 minutes.

Runaway Marriage

(Columbia)

Good

Second in the series of the Court of Human Relations, this subject relates the hardships that a young couple encounters when they marry while still in college. The boy, an outstanding member of the college football team, marries a girl who has an excellent scholastic record. The marriage fails to improve their college standing as they worry over bills when the boy's father discontinues his allowance. For disobeying training rules the boy is thrown off the football team, and the girl loses her high standing in scholastics. After some advice from the Court of Human Relations they decide to live apart for the remainder of their college life. Running time, 10 minutes.

Don Donald

(United Artists)

Good

Donald, the vituperative duck, goes Latin with a vengeance in this short subject as he woos his senorita. Donald, astride his miniature donkey, visits the hacienda of his current fancy, and sings out to the lady of the house who hurries out to do a tango. When she and the donkey become tangled, Donald very ungentlemanly evidences much pleasure, which arouses the ire of the dancer. To make amends Donald trades the donkey for a car and takes her for a ride in the desert. The car breaks down and so does the romance. Running time, 8½ minutes.

A Story of the Rose

Of Some Appeal

This short subject relates the story of how a rose wooed and won for a shepherd lad the hand and heart of a princess fair. Using the method of living actors, marionette figures and cartoon characters to carry on the action of the plot, the result is a bit confusing to the spectator. Nor does the additional coloring lend much benefit to the work as a whole for it tends to be of a glaring and excessive variety. Nevertheless, there will be some appeal in it for the young and the sentimental. Running time, 10 minutes.

NATIONALISM REPORTED MAKING JAPAN TIGHT MARKET FOR FILMS

Large Trading Companies Are Called Most Feasible Agency for Foreign Products Under Growing Nationalistic Ideals

900 to 1,000 Pictures, Including Domestic, Being Offered for Distribution Among 1,300 Theatres in Japan Proper

by S. F. LINDSTROM
in New York

Siegfried L. Lindstrom, author of the accompanying article, explains the position of the motion picture as it stands in Japan today, especially the relation of American distributors to the Japanese film industry, a position which apparently is undergoing changes about which little is known in this country.

Mr. Lindstrom has arrived in New York after spending 25 of his 39 years in Japan, where he was born. His parents were missionaries, who first arrived in Japan some 45 years ago.

The past year has seen Mr. Lindstrom in residence at Dairen, in South Manchuria. There he had been working on a biography of the late Marshal Chang Tso-lin, Manchurian warlord. Mr. Lindstrom was Far Eastern general sales manager for United Artists corporation. Later, for four years, he was manager of the office of the Japanese N. Y. K. Steamship Line, and three years ago took on the Far Eastern managership of Radio-Keith-Orpheum. Since then, in the main, he has been engaged in the distribution of motion pictures in Japan.

Of all the Far Eastern territories, Japan offered the most profitable field for American motion picture distribution up to five years ago. But conditions have changed. In the intervening years, the growth of an unbridled nationalistic consciousness finally has managed to create a situation whereby all business enterprises, including pictures, other than those in the control of the Japanese themselves, are made to feel painfully out of place, with merciless native competition, backed up by canny government legislation, calculated to make it all but impossible for them to operate at a profit.

Accordingly, the branch offices of the most representative firms abroad seeking to continue trading with Japan are found absorbed, on an agency basis, by one or another of the half-dozen or so of great trading firms which rule the economic destiny of the Island Empire, operating as empires within an Empire—so powerful are they.

Most American motion picture companies, nearly all of which have exchanges in Japan, maintain offices appointed in a manner out of all porportion to the amount of businesss they ever can hope to realize; and the same is true of the size of their native staffs, nearly all of which are several times larger than is needed.

Decade of Study

One policy followed, perhaps unthinkingly, by the motion picture companies places them in a more difficult position than other businesses. It takes nothing less than a decade of hard study, supported by the patience of a Job and the tact of a diplomat, to learn how to do business with the Japanese. The home executives of one picture company I know of have had the good sense to appreciate this. As a consequence, while competitors fall into all kinds of pitfalls, the grizzled veteran who has represented this one company for nearly fifteen years, and who knows his Japan, year after year leads the trade in amount of gross business done.

Difficult Market

Japan as a market for motion pictures presents an anomaly. The people themselves, I am convinced, are the most enthusiastic cinemagoers in the world. There are fan clubs and cinema study groups in greater proportion to population than in any other country. Secondly, the Jananese take their picture viewing seriously, psychologically quite unlike anything to be observed either in this country or in Europe. The entire populace is keenly cinemaminded. But it seeks the emotional thrill. The melodramatic tear producer, and drama having to do with militarism and conquest and imperialism, calculated to arouse in them feelings of patriotism, are the sort of pictures the Japanese demand. Side-splitting comedies rarely receive their genuine appreciation.

Paradoxically, Japan is one of the most difficult places in which to sell pictures. A first factor to be considered is that of population. It is 64,450,005 in Japan proper, half of that of the U. S. A. Yet distributors, year in and year out, try to arrange Japan releases for more features than are released in the United States.

There are 15,000 picture houses in the U. S. A. Japan has only 1,300. The U. S. A. produces nearly 600 pictures per year. Japan, at the peak of production, turned out 798 in 1928; 658 in 1929. About 400 were produced in 1934; and the figure last year was 470. Every year sees the American exchanges collectively carrying to the Japanese market some 350 pictures. With a Japanese average of 500 the total would be 850, to which must be added 100 to 125 European pictures imported yearly, half of which are handled by the Towa Trading Company. Towa Shoji occupies the favored position, as much of its stock is held by officials of the No. 1 theatre circuit, Shochiku.

Nationalistic Sentiment

Such sentiments as "Patronize home industry first," and "Buy Japan-made goods—if you are a patriot," place Japan-made films in an obviously preferential position. The market can absorb only 200 American and European pictures a year. As Towa Shoji is guaranteed releases for its 50 features imported yearly, this means that only some 150 American features can be released in one or the other of the two important circuits, Shochiku and Toho, and their affiliates. Altogether, only 450 cinema houses in Japan play foreign pictures. Hence, when we read that 265 American pictures were released in Japan during 1935, it means that over 100 pictures received their premiere in some "dump" theatre, paying accordingly.

Efforts to develop an American distributors Board of Trade, such as exists in Shanghai and other Far Eastern key spots, collapsed.

Increasing Difficulties

With the Fascist leanings of the Japanese Military Party, the suspicions of foreign influences, and the difficulties with China and Soviet Russia, the position of independent foreign business enterprise in Japan becomes increasingly difficult. The Japanese insist on taking a hand in operation of Ford Motorcar Company and a block of its stock, as the price of allowing the company to continue in Japan.

Pictures were first to be boycotted violently, in 1924, following Japanese resentment against the American Immigration Act, promulgated in that year. The playing of foreign motion pictures, during such times, the Military hints, must be curtailed. Pictures, they say, distract the minds of the nation's youth from the serious task of building up a national consciousness.

The first American motion picture companies to tie up with Japanese big business for representation, and the handling of their affairs in all territories over which the Sunrise Flag waves, will occupy a favored position.

Japanese motion picture interests are making arrangements to show newsreel pictures in subway stations in Tokyo, according to a report of the Department of Commerce in Washington. It is said that theatres seating 200 persons may be opened in every subway station in the metropolis and that admission will be approximately 3 cents.

This work will be carried out by the International Standards Association and in cooperation with the International Conference of Scientific and Applied Photography.

The following committee was appointed at the conference to make detailed suggestions on the scope and organization of the work and to consider problems of national standardization in the same field: L. Goldsmith, Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and W. B. Rayton, Bausch and Lomb Optical Company.

Educational Will Vote New Plan of Recapitalization

Stockholders of Educational Pictures will vote on a recapitalization plan for the company and a program of corporate simplification at a meeting scheduled for February 2 at Wilmington, Del. Under the company's plan of recapitalization, Educational Pictures would be authorized to issue 150,000 shares of new no par common stock and 150,000 shares of new $100 par, eight per cent preferred stock, or a capitalization of $1,500,000 and 150,000 shares of common.

Preferred stockholders are offered five shares of new common stock for each share of old preferred, consisting of 3 2/10 shares of new common for a share of preferred and 1 8/10 shares of new common for accrued dividends on each share of preferred. Common stockholders are offered for each of old common, plus $10, a warrant to buy one share of new common.

E. W. Hammons, Educational president, advised stockholders that in his opinion the company, within a reasonable time, should be in a position to pay $1.50 per share on the new common.

Wall Street circles Tuesday reported that Educational contemplated launching extensive production of non-theatrical pictures for school, civic and industrial use. Mr. Hammons, however, said that while the idea had been given consideration on many occasions no definite plans had been developed by the company yet and there was little likelihood of anything being done in this connection within the next year or 18 months.

The meeting will be asked to approve dissolution of the wholly owned Educational subsidiaries, Alliance Film Securities, Far East Film Corporation, Coronet Film Corporation and Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., If the dissolutions are approved, there will remain Educational Films Corporation of America, Educational Prod., Inc., and Educational Studios, Inc., all of which are wholly owned operating subsidiaries of Educational Pictures, Inc., the parent holding company.

The company's program of corporate simplification is being undertaken, largely for purposes of tax economies.

St. Louis Stockholders To Meet

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the St. Louis Amusement Company will be held in St. Louis next Tuesday, according to Thomas N. Dysart, president. California Labor Licenses

The California labor commissioner issued licenses to 198 theatrical agents during 1936, according to figures just made public in Los Angeles. This represents a new high in that district, and authorities believe the figure will pass 200 early in 1937. The increase is partly because of the radio agencies which have opened offices in Hollywood during the past year.

Cheli Is RKO Manager

Bruno Cheli will succeed Nat Liebskind as RKO Radio manager for Brazil when Mr. Liebskind moves shortly to take charge of RKO Radio operations in Argentine and Chile, where new exchanges will be opened, it was announced by Ben Y. Cammack, RKO South American manager.

Gladys Swarthout and Fred MacMurray in "CHAMPAGNE WALTZ" with JACK OAKIE · VELOZ and YOLANDA · Herman Bing · Vivienne Osborne · Frank Forest Benny Baker · Ernest Cossart · A Paramount Picture · Directed by A. Edward Sutherland

INGREDIENTS of SUCCESS

No selling campaign, however good, can make a picture. "CHAMPAGNE WALTZ" is sweeping into the top grosser class because it has the elements you see on this page. GLADYS SWARTHOUT contributes her first really great performance to pictures. FRED MacMURRAY now is solid box-office. Jack Oakie comes through with a rip-snorting comedy job, supported by such experts as Herman Bing and Ernest Cossart. Veloz and Yolanda, after all, are the top ballroom dancers of a day when ballroom dancing is at its peak of popularity. "Champagne Waltz", under the keen direction of A. Edward Sutherland, proves to be a fast-moving story, with many hit tunes — all in all a swell production.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The artistic temperament of the great concert pianist and composer, Leopold Godowsky, was ruffled more than once by the unreasonable monopoly taken on the family bathroom by his son, Leopold, Junior, who all too frequently turned the place into an improvised laboratory for photographic research. "Leetle" Leopold paid little or no attention to "Pa Pa" Leopold's rantings, and so continued toying at home with his test tubes and Bunson-burners, until he test-tubed and Bunson-burned a ten-year contract out of the Eastman Kodak Company. So, he will continue at motion picture photographic research, for Eastman, but in larger quarters, in Hollywood, than the Godowsky family bathroom. Few are aware that it was "leetle" Leopold who invented, and sold to Eastman, the Kodachrome color process upon which Eastman now is concentrating its color-film efforts both in amateur-film and theatrical-film markets.

With the opening on Broadway of the Polish-made motion picture, "A Yiddle with His Fiddle," Molly Picon, Jewish actress of vaudeville and stage, becomes a full-fledged motion picture star, and so rates attention in the motion picture press. There's not much to report about Molly at the moment, except, perhaps, the fact that she returned to New York the other day from a vacation in Miami. Miss Picon did not enjoy her holiday, however. Seems that several "cloak-and-suiters" from New York's manufacturing district, likewise vacationing on the sunny sands, made love to her "under that gorgeous Miami moon." But what love! "In the middle of all the nice words," complained Molly, they said 'Poddon, please' and out they went to the nearest drug store for a bicarbonate of soda. They all have stomache trouble."

"I don't care if he's been torn to pieces," she snapped. "My husband told me to bet on Honey Dew and I want to bet."

The suburban New York golf courses frequented so frequently by Broadway film bigwigs are landmarked by "oases," swearing-off places and bookmakers' concessions. In Hollywood, the film golf courses are pleasantly studded with palm trees, cocoanut groves and notaries-public who are required to witness score card tabulations by competive players. The few American film folk in Singapore who play golf are afflicted with a golf course where the first eight holes are landmarked, respectively, by a lunatic asylum, two mortuaries, a maternity hospital, a gun-powder magazine, a hospital for contagious disease cases, a Chinese graveyard and a prison.

Walter, however, had read only four items and looked perplexed at Mr. Lanfield's interruption. "What's the matter?" Lanfield asked. "I haven't finished!" Walter chirped. And then they all sat down and laughed out loud.

B. F. Adcock, managing the Fox Strand theatre in Salina, Kansas, tells us that the midwest folk out his way are still surveying the damage done last summer by the grasshopper plague. Definitely established, and long since recorded in the nation's press, was the complete devastation of the Kansas corn crop. "But, now," writes Mr. Adcock, "it seems that the grasshoppers were really so thick in some localities that, besides devouring the corn and all other surface vegetation, they ate the fence posts on farms along the roadways the while regiments of tumblebuds followed behind rolling up the barbed wire."

Miss Helen Hayes, the diminutive star of "Victoria Regina," of the stage, and the occasional star of motion pictures, valiantly faced some 550 high school and college interviewers the other afternoon in Broadway's Broadhurst theatre, to withstand a barrage of questions ranging from the Simpson-King Edward case to the relative merits of the stage, the screen and radio as dramatic media. Politics, domestic life and other "sidelines" were sandwiched in by the embryonic journalists, contrary to Miss Hayes' specific instructions that "this is to be an interview of the theatre." Sonja Henie's father, Wilhelm, 64, a robust Norwegian, and her mother, Selma Nilsen Henie, are already here, having left their fur business, established a century ago by the Henie family in Oslo. Wilhelm Henie bought the first automobile ever seen in Norway, a one-cylinder Oldsmobile, with which he used to frighten the whole town.

Sonja, of course, has been recognized by Fox—she's now in their "One in a Million"—as a skater, a skier, a singer, a dancer and whatnot.

"I guess she gets some of it from me," unblushed Mr. Henie. Regardless, daughter Sonja will not allow Papa Henie to smoke cigars or drink Scotch before noon time.

ALLIED WILL ELECT OFFICERS JANUARY 22

Regional Units Name Delegates to Meeting of Board of Directors at Baltimore

Allied States' president, Nathan Yamins, of Massachusetts, and past-presidents W. A. (Al) Steffes, of Minnesota; James Ritter, Michigan, and Sidney Samuelson, of New Jersey, constitute a new nominating committee chosen to receive suggestions from the affiliated regional organizations relative to filling the several elective offices and to report a slate for consideration of the directors at the annual board meeting on January 21st and 22nd, to be held at Baltimore's Emerson hotel.

A majority of the affiliated regionals already have designated their official representatives who will sit and vote as directors. In addition to a duly empowered director, each state organization is urged by national Allied to send from two to six representatives to observe and advise the board. These representatives may participate in the discussions, but they may not vote.

The elective offices and their present holders are: President, Nathan Yamins; Chairman of the board and general counsel, Abram F. Myers; secretary and treasurer, Herman A. Blum; cerresponding secretary, Henderson M. Richey. The various reginal vice-presidents are subsequently appointed by the president.

The first meeting, on Thursday, January 21st, will be called to order at 10:30 a. m. to hear officers' reports. The remainder of this session will be devoted to receiving proposals for future policy and action from the assembled exhibitors and the appointment of additional committees. The afternoon session will be called late enough to bring in such committee reports as are ready—other than that of the nominating committee. A report will be heard from Al Steffes, chairman of the "Defense Committee" which is conducting a campaign against socalled "major company circuit aggressions," and time will be allotted for a discussion of the work of the committee. The committee is concerned with the raising of a "war chest" with which to purchase legal talent for the drafting of state bills to divorce production and distribution from exhibition.

Insurance Plan Discussion

The morning meeting on the 22nd will be called at 10 o'clock and will continue with the unfinished business, including the Allied "public liability insurance plan." The delegates also will hear from the independent producers. The report of the finance committee will be received, and acted upon, and in the afternoon the directors will receive the report and recommendations of the nominating committee, proceeding then to the election of officers.

Allied's national officers expressed the hope this week that the situation growing out of the Major Berry trade practice meetings in Washington, three weeks ago, will have crystalized before the annual directors' meeting, so that it can be discussed in detail.

A bulletin from national Allied headquarters, in Washington, contained Allied's interpretation of the possible results from Major Beery's meeting with representatives from various American industries. Allied said that it constituted the only official motion picture representation at the conferences in Washington, and that it "did not join in the organized boycott of the meeting and the studied affront to the Administration fomented in other brinches of the industry."

Allied reported that Major Berry's government Councid for Industrial Progress heard and approved reports on (1) National industrial policy; (2) Maximum work week; (3) General wages; (4) Child labor; (5) Fair trade practices; (6) Internal and external competition; (7) Government competition with private enterprise; (8) Anti-trust laws; (9) Financial aid to small enterprises; and, (10) Employment and unemployment data.

"It is believed," concluded Allied, "that the Council's reports and recommendations will be presented to the President in the form of recommendations for legislation." But, added Allied, "unless a constitutional amendment is submitted to and ratified by the states, it is difficult to see how federal regulation can reach employment in the theatres. The present plan appears to be to fashion legislation under the existing commerce clause to cover industries such as steel, motors, coal, etc., whose products move extensively in the channels of interstate commerce."

Allied suggested that the motion picture industry create the post of "public relations counselor of the motion picture." "Because motion pictures affect the public so intimately and the business is under the surveillance of so many interested parties, both private and official, the motion picture industry stands in urgent need of an expert public relations counsel," said Allied. Although no specific plan or candidate was advanced by Allied, the organization likened its idea to Standard Oil's early operations through the late Ivy Lee. In this connection Allied charged that the organized industry, and, particularly the Allied competitor, MPTOA, had failed in furthering public goodwill both in and out of the industry.

Thompson, president of Trans Lux Movies Corporation, in addition to an annual salary of $10,000, is to receive five per cent of the consolidated net profits of the company and 1,000 shares annually for five years of the common stock of Trans Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation was reported to the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington this week.

Court Upholds Agent

The district court of appeals in Los Angeles this week upheld the decision of a lower court which grants an agent the right to sue a client for damages beyond the date of the agency contract. The case concerned the suit of the Small-Landau agency against Lloyd Nolan, which was decided in the agency's favor last February by Supreme Court Justice Thurmond Clark.

"Anchors Aweigh" Basis of Suit

Arthur H. Miles has filed a suit in the United States district court for $1,000,000 damages against Robbins Amusement Corporation and Doubleday-Doran. The suit charges infringement of the lyrics of "Anchors Aweigh" which, Mr. Miles claims, was written by him and Lieutenant Charles Zimmerman in 1927.

Argentine to Make 50 Films in 1937

More than 50 feature productions will be made in the Argentine during 1937, according to trade estimates in Buenos Aires. The total working companies will be swelled by the indicated transfer of important production activities to Buenos Aires from Spain, particularly Madrid and Barcelona, where virtually all production has been halted as a result of the Spanish civil war.

Metropolitan Studios in the Argentine capital has enlarged its facilities and installed sound and photographic departments under American supervision to accommodate the expected influx. Negotiations are under way with Spanish producers for use of the rental studio, now the largest in South America. Distribution offices of major American companies are discussing arrangements for adding a number of locally produced films to their South American release schedules, such as has been done in the past by Paramount and Universal.

Will H. Hays Meets Studio Publicists

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., now in Hollywood, met with the publicity directors of the major studios Tuesday and commended the executives on the strides that have been made in advertising during the past year.

During the course of the meeting, the candid camera situation was discussed and steps were outlined to prevent the publishing of stills which are detrimental to the industry. However, no definite plan of action has been mapped out as yet.

WPA Radio Stage Unit Booked Into Roxy

The stage variety bills are an intended development of the radio program, which features professional talent recruited from the unemployment rolls. The air announcements make a point of asking radio audiences to urge local theatres to initiate stage shows.

U.S. ESTIMATES 4,500,000,000 ATTENDANCE AND BILLION GROSS

U. S. Census Bureau Estimates 2,763 Places of Amusement Grossed $59,086,000 and Paid $13,448,000 in Wages

The United States Government this week made two separate observations on the material progress of the motion picture industry, both adding further verification to the already well confirmed consensus that the film business is making rapid strides.

United States Department of Commerce estimated 4,500,000,000 motion picture theatre admissions in 1936 grossed $1,000,000,000 at theatres, and said that business increased from 10 to 30 per cent in the year. Some 500 new theatres were built in 1936 at a cost of $27,000,000, increasing to $2,027,000,000 the total investment in the industry.

United States Census Bureau, publishing the first of a series of reports, estimated that 2,763 places of amusement in New England grossed $59,086,000 and paid out $13,448,000 in wages; and that 1,722 places in the eight Mountain states grossed $19,267,000 and paid out $3,872,000.

With the close of 1936 the industry was in the best position since 1929, according to Nathan D. Golden, chief of the motion picture section of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Washington.

Approximately 500 features were produced in the year at a cost of $135,000,000, an increase of $10,000,000 over 1935. The increased cost of production, Mr. Golden observed, was attributed by the industry to the better class of pictures and to increased salaries paid studio personnel.

About 500 theatres were constructed or reconditioned at a cost of $27,000,000, further increasing the $2,000,000,000 previously invested in the industry. Some of the theatres reopened had been closed as long as 15 years, Mr. Golden added.

Money Availability Cited

"The prime factors in the reopening of theatres during the year was the increased availability of money occasioned by the steadily advancing economic improvement within the United States and the better quality pictures which were produced and exhibited," he said.

"Box office records for the year gave evidence that better quality pictures attract additional patronage for motion picture theatres. During 1936, some 88,000,000 admissions weekly to motion picture theatres were accounted for, an increase of 10 per cent on a national scale compared with 1935 with the increase in certain sections being recorded as high as 30 per cent," Mr. Golden continued. The $1,000,000,000 gross revenue at theatres was reached for the first time since 1929, he added.

"With general economic improvement within the United States continuing at the present rate, coupled with the production of high quality pictures which have been scheduled by the producing companies, there is every indication of increasingly larger patronage."

Census Bureau Reports

Making public the first of a series of reports on the amusement industries of the country, the United States Census Bureau this week announced that the 2,763 places of amusement in New England last year had gross operating receipts of $59,086,000, of which $13,448,000 was paid out in salaries and wages to the average of 13,198 persons employed through the year.

No breakdown of the figures to show the motion picture branch of the industry was made in the report, but figures on film exhibition, specifically, are expected to be published soon. The report issued this week covered not only motion picture and other theatres, which are in the majority, but also circuses and other shows, amusement parks, bowling alleys and billiard parlors, and dance halls.

A total of 2,125 proprietors and firm members were active in the operation of the 2,763 establishments, their compensation not being included in the total for pay-roll expenditures.

Figures on the six states comprising the New England territory, as carried in the official census report, were as follows:

Mountain States

Aggregate receipts of 1,722 places of amusement in the eight Mountain states in 1935 were $19,267,000, out of which $3,872,000 was paid out in wages to the average of 5,563 persons to whom employment was given throughout the year, it was reported by the Census Bureau.

As in the case of the New England states, the summary for the Mountain states includes not only motion picture and other theatres but all other types of amusements.

Details for the amusement business in the eight Mountain states, were announced by the bureau as follows:

ARIZONA, 158 establishments with receipts of $2,379,000; 123 active proprietors and firm members and an average of 562 employees with a payroll of $4,005,000 of which $26,000 was for part-time work.

Schenck, chairman. The program, to become effective February 15th, involves the exchange of each seven per cent share for a new five per cent cumulative but unconvertible preferred share, three and one-third shares of common stock and $15 in cash. The plan involves expenditure of a total of $450,000 in cash. Accumulations to March 15th, 1937, will have been expunged by the conversion of the outstanding shares for the new securities and the "extraordinary dividend."

Court Bars Reopening Of Fox West Coast Case

With the refusal of the circuit court of appeals in San Francisco on Wednesday to reopen the Talley and Carbar Corporation bankruptcy action against Fox West Coast Theatres the way may be cleared for the acquisition of the Chase National Bank holdings in Twentieth Century-Fox by the common stockholders.

The negotiations have been under way in various stages for well over a year but have been blocked while the FWC receivership situation continued tangled in the courts.

Fox Fight Centers On All-Continent

Hiram Steelman, trustee in receivership for the estate of William Fox, made another move in the United States supreme court this week in his effort to gain control of assets in the All-Continent Corporation, owned by Mr. Fox's wife and daughters and which creditors plead should be used to satisfy claims against the motion picture pioneer.

Mr. Steelman asked the Federal court to set aside an injunction restraining him from prosecuting a suit against All-Continent in the New Jersey Chancery Court. He also asked the court to review a decision of the third circuit court of appeals under which All-Continent was permitted to sue the trustee in Federal court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

Delving into a new field of examination the Fox bankruptcy examination in Atlantic City last week began inquiry into the years from 1926 to 1930 during the development of sound pictures. A. L. Richards, of Hughes, Schurman and Dwight of New York, representing Twentieth Century-Fox, a creditor, started the new attack which was designed to show that Mr. Fox acquired patent rights and options in his own name, allegedly for private profit. Mr. Richards charged in his opening statement that when the patents proved disappointing Mr. Fox "unloaded" them on his corporations on the plea that he had been acting for them.

Soudanese Beauty

Walter Futter, producer of the Paul Robeson picture, "Jericho" (originally "Salt") for Capitol, revivified the jaded film scribes a thrill and gave them a new news story by parading at Claridge's for their inspection Princess Kouba, Soudanese beauty whom he discovered while on a location hunt in the desert and thereabouts. The princess, over in London to learn English for her part, is comely and, if she is not loquacious at the moment,—well, there are less attractive types of speechlessness in film stars.

The Robeson picture is to be directed by Thornton Freeland, who already has been location hunting in the Sahara with cameraman John Boyle, and will go back for scenes there. From a Frances Marion script supplemented by original songs for Robeson by Michael Carr and Jimmy Kennedy, who wrote "Isle of Capri," it probably will enjoy the services of a second star in Henry Wilcoxon.

"Jericho," with "Lilac Domino," will complete a notable year's production by the Max Schach companies, Capitol, Buckingham and Trafalgar. Already shown is "Pagliacci," and completed but not yet shown are "Dreaming Lips," with Elisabeth Bergner, and "Love from a Stranger," with Ann Harding. In the year eight films of ambitious scope were completed.

The Soudanese Princess Kouba, "discovered" by Walter Futter, producer, is chosen to star opposite Paul Robeson in Capitol's "Jericho." An earlier, tentative title for the production was "Salt."

For U.S. Market

The Schach activities for 1937 will begin with the production of A. J. Cronin's "The Stars Look Down," Karl Grune directing. This best-seller was bought in face of Hollywood competition.

To follow is an all-color version of Gay's "Beggar's Opera," which has the London stage record of 1,463 performances at the Lyric theatre, Hammersmith. The British Chemicolour process, recently tried out successfully in sequences of "Pagliacci," will be used.

"Dynamite Nobel," a biographical drama built on the career of the explosive king who established the famous Peace Prize; "Siamese White," from the Maurice Collins book hit; "International Quartet," from a J. B. Priestley original, and "George Lovelace, Tolpuddle Martyr," are other films planned by Schach, who is working with a definite aim for the American market and has a United Artists release there for his bigger features.

"Elephant Boy"

Robert Flaherty has completed Denham shots on "Elephant Boy," to round off the London Films production based on Kipling's "Toomai of the Elephants," made for the most part against Indian locations. The 13-year-old Indian boy Sabu, called a "discovery" after his scenes on location and brought to London by Mr. Flaherty, has been signed for another picture, and a story is being written for him. Iravatha, elephant lead in the film, has been bought by the Royal Zoological Society and will remain in the menagerie in Regent's Park, London.

A recent story acquisition by London Films is Mary Borden's 'Action for Slander," which turns on legal proceedings instigated by an officer charged with cheating at cards. Some time ago Alexander Korda bought the same writer's "King of the Jews," but British censorship rules against depiction of sacred characters prevented its being put into production.

Soskin Returns

Having completed arrangements with Columbia Pictures for the borrowing of talent and for a call on scripts, Paul Soskin, head of Soskin Productions in London, which will make seven pictures in England for Columbia international release next season, sailed for home this week after three months in this country.

Negotiations are still underway for the services of director Monta Bell, Mr. Soskin said. He expects to have the deal closed on his arrival in London.

in London

Financing for motion picture production in Great Britian is reported to be growing more conservative, but for any definitely solid film project money is as readily available as ever.

Attention to British production finances was drawn last weekend by "scare stories" in several newspaper stories that were branded as untrue by three other newspapers. The sensational accounts were attributed to a piece in a British trade publication which had declared that two banks were deciding against further loans. Another factor lay in the receiverships of Twickenham Film Productions, Twickenham Film Distributors, and Julius Hagen Productions, at the instance of the bank and insurance company concerned. It was explained that actually the banks advance money not to producers but to insurance companies, that most of the small, $500 film producing companies work on bank overdrafts secured by insurance policies at a total cost of 10 per cent or upward.

To the alarm stories in the London Herald, Express, and News Chronicle, the fact that there was no change in policy of banks and insurance companies was pointed out by the Times, Financial Times, and the Daily Mail.

It was seen as probable that press charges of scandalous waste in heavy negative costs will have the effect of encouraging the Government to adopt the provision in the Moyne report which recommended a Government film commission to supervise production financing.

While most of the current press stories are said to have been exaggerated, it is believed that a crash in British production, admitted in many quarters to be overdue, will be precipitated by the newspaper attentions. Several more receiverships are expected. Characterized as camouflage are the stories that America will not give release to British pictures, and that an increased quota is necessary here.

Increased Studio Space

Another problem is the recent huge increase in British studio floor space. Some studios planned to fill this space with the £100 companies, based on insurance finance, but there is a strong possibility now that a large percentage of the new studio space will remain empty.

Twickenham's capital is £240,000 ($1,200,000) privately held, and it is understood that obligations of all three Hagen companies amount to £500,000 secured loans and £100,000 due to creditors.

Wardour Films has taken over the bookings on five Twickenham films, and six finished but not yet trade shown.

The general council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association on Saturday will receive a report from the general purpose committee recommending against the proposal of the Kinematograph Renters Society for a joint trade association with a British Will Hays.

WILL H. HAYS and T. H. FLIGELSTONE, President of Cinematograph

Exhibitors' fear of distributors is greater than their fear of a Government commission as suggested in the Moyne report. Some would welcome an official body which might control the trading methods of KRS. There is a strong feeling that any joint trade body would be dominated by the KRS, exhibitors having sacrificed the power of opposition.

The exhibitor attitude is a surprising development which leaves the trade disunited in the face of the Moyne report.

Blame American Market

Facing shareholders with a report and balance sheet showing a net loss of £105,599 ($528,000) for the year ended October 31st and a total debit balance of £131,148, directors of British & Dominions Film Corporation, at the annual meeting, largely blamed failure to obtain the expected revenue in the American market. E. Ronald Crammond, the chairman, pointed to the low returns from America on "Escape Me Never" and "Brewster's Millions."

Mr. Crammond intimated that the main activity of the company in future would be to manage Pinewood, for which it receives a yearly management fee of £10,000 ($50,000).

C. M. Woolf, managing director, replying to a shareholder's suggestion that something should be done in retaliation to exclude American films from England, said that no president of the Board of Trade would be likely to listen to such a suggestion, which laid England open to serious reprisals. Also, pointed out Mr. Woolf, "Ninety per cent of the films shown on British screens are American.

"We have not got America, and I doubt if we ever shall get it," was one remark of the speaker. He indicated that the future policy of B & D would be to make as few films as their contracts permitted for the British market and as economically as possible.

Mr. Woolf is also chairman and managing director of General Film Distributors, Ltd., partners in and British representatives of Universal.

The picture is having a highly successful run at the New Gallery.

A Flying Start

NEW production got off to an auspicious start during the opening week of 1937. Nine pictures went into work. In the same period but four finished. Coincidentally with the celebration of Adolph Zukor's Silver Jubilee, Paramount began work on three films. Columbia and Grand National started two. MGM and Twentieth Century-Fox checked in with one each. On the completed side of the roster, Warner finished two and United Artists and MGM one each.

First of the Paramounts to go, "High, Wide And Handsome," comedy romance, features Irene Dunne with Randolph Scott, Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Patterson, William Frawley and Dorothy Lamour as the important support. Rouben Mamoulian is directing. The cast of "Danger, Men Working" is headed by Lew Ayers, Benny Baker, Eugene Pallette and Ruth Coleman. Charles Barton is the director. In "The Years Are So Long," Fay Bainter, Buelah Bondi, Victor Moore, Thomas Mitchell, Barbara Reed and Louise Beavers are the featured players whom Leo McCarey will direct.

Under its own sponsorship Columbia started "Speed Mad." The cast includes Rosalind Keith, Joe Allen, Jr., J. M. Kerrigan, George Ernest, Arthur Loft, Marsha Tibbetts, Joseph Sawyer, John Tyrrell, Al Hill, Richard Terry, Ray Bennett and Howard Hickman. For release by this company, Larry Darmour started "Trouble in Morocco." Jack Holt and Mae Clarke have the leads with C. Henry Gordon, Victor Varconi, Paul Hurst, Harold Huber and Bradley Paige included in the cast. Ernest B. Schoedsack is directing.

Stage Play on Film Stage

FOR Grand National distribution, "23½ Hours Leave," a Douglas MacLean production was started. The cast lists James Ellison, Terry Walker, Wally Maher and Pat Gleason. John Blystone is directing. The Second feature for the company is B. F. Ziedman's "Two Shall Meet." Eric Linden and Cecilia Parker are starred. The supporting principals are Dorothy Peterson, Bernadene Hayes, Roger Imhoff, Pedro de Cordoba, Patsy O'Connor, Buster Phelps, and Sherwood Bailey.

At MGM "Man In Possession" went on the stages. Jean Harlow and Robert Taylor have the leading roles, with the support currently including E. E. Clive, Reginald Owen, Henrietta Crossman, Cora Witherspoon and Una O'Connor. W. S. Van Dyke is directing.

Last of the newly started films is "50 Roads to Town," Twentieth Century-Fox. The cast includes Don Ameche, Ann Sothern, Slim Summerville, Walter Catlett, Allan Lane, Donald Meek and Stepin Fetchit. Norman Taurog is directing.

TWO JUMPS AHEAD OF PLOT NOWADAYS

In the near future, pictures will either have twice as much story as those now being made or be half as long, according to B. P. Schulberg.

"Years ago," Mr. Schulberg explained, "everything was presented in complete detail. If the heroine was sad, it was necessary to demonstrate her grief with a tearful and protracted closeup. The hero's anger was protracted through close shots of facial grimaces.

"Nowadays, audiences with keener perception and greater imagination are usually two jumps ahead of the plot, and more than inclined to be bored stiff if presented with a prolonged picturization of the emotional condition of the players."

As examples of what he calls the "terse technique," Mr. Schulberg cited "Three Smart Girls," "My Man Godfrey" and "After the Thin Man."

Mr. Schulberg credits much of the change to the abbreviated sketches in radio broadcasts.

Completed Pictures

THE two pictures finished by Warner are "Her Husband's Secretary" and "The King and the Chorus Girl." The first will present Warren Hull, Jean Muir, Beverly Roberts, Harry Davenport, Clara Blandick, Stuart Holmes and Pauline Garon. Frank McDonald directed. The second film, a continental romance drama, places Fernand Gravet and Joan Blondell in the leads and Edward Everett Horton, Mary Nash, Alan Mowbray, Luis Alberni, Jane Wyman, Adrian Rosely, Torben Meyer and Georgette Rhodes in support. Mervyn LeRoy is both producer and director.

"History is Made at Night," a Walter Wanger production for United Artists, was finished. The cast includes Charles Boyer, Jean Arthur, Leo Carrillo, Ivan Lebedeff, Colin Clive, George Meeker and Lucien Prival. Frank Borzage directed.

Western Heroines

Strangely, though western pictures always did and probably always will occupy an important place in the production scheme, no western heroines have been permanently developed as such to take the places of Ruth Roland, Dorothy Dalton, Victoria Forde and Eileen Percy of happy memory.

Although Sol Lesser departed these shores for a European vacation some weeks ago, it seems that he, or more probably his press department searching around for something to do in his absence, has decided to see what can be done about remedying the situation. According to the plan, which Mr. Lesser undoubtedly will be surprised to hear, a contest is to be conducted through which it is hoped to discover some sweet miss to follow in the footsteps of the Misses Roland, Dalton, Forde and Percy who will be permanently starred in his productions of Zane Grey and Harold Bell Wright outdoor stories of action, romance and adventure.

The qualifications are pretty stern, however. The girls who hope to have some dashing western hero rescue them (on the screen, of course) must have some acting experience, either amateur or professional, possess an athletic figure, boast a peaches and cream complexion, and be expertly skillful in all outdoor sports, particularly, of course, in horseback riding.

Actors' Drive

The Screen Actors Guild has opened a concentrated drive on producers via the location route. Six stock players, two hairdressers and a wardrobe man were taken off the Paramount set of "Souls at Sea," working at San Pedro, for having no Guild or union affiliation. . . . Steven Pallos concluded a lengthy Hollywood visit and signed two writers and supervised the opening in Hollywood of "Rembrandt." He will discuss program requirements with Alexander Korda immediately upon arriving in London. . . Paramount's annual production conference officially closed after a one day session at the Ambassador Hotel. . . M-G-M has set the world premiere of "The Good Earth" for the Carthay Circle theatre January 29th . . . Will Hays has settled down to Hollywood production affairs following the Adolph Zukor Jubilee celebration . . . Projectionists local 150, IATSE, opened a picketing campaign against the Wilshire theatre in Santa Monica, bringing to three the number of independent houses now feeling union pressure in the closed shop campaign. . . President George Browne and IATSE officials from various parts of the country are here for a week of conferences on studio policies and problems. . . Funeral services for M. E. Greenwood, M-G-M studio manager, were held at Forest Lawn. . . Gus Edwards was released from his Republic contract and moved over to the Warner radio station KFWB, where he will take on a new air program. . . . The Local Independent Theatre owners association announced their first annual convention to be held at the Ambassador Hotel January 25th.

Loew's Theatre '36 Net Is $423,699

A net income of $423,699 for the fiscal year ending August 31, last, is shown by Loew's Theatre and Realty Corporation this week in its annual report as filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington. The balance sheet of the company showed, among other items, theatre receipts and miscellaneous income of $5,400,440 and rent income of $405,249. Theatre operations, including film rentals, cost $3,538,544 and $317,000 was paid in booking fees to an allied corporation and $1,828,292 in rents on leased property.

The company, a subsidiary of Loew's, Inc., which holds 100 per cent of its equity stocks, is in turn full owner of six subsidiaries and part owner of three others. The major holders of securities other than equity stocks were Nicholas M. Schenck, president, who held $69,000 in six per cent bonds; Leopold Friedman, secretary, $22,900 in the same bonds; Isadore Frey, assistant secretary, $5,000, and H. Halborn, assistant secretary, $4,500.

A balance sheet for the theatre corporation and its wholly owned subsidiaries showed theatre receipts and miscellaneous income as $6,691,716, and rent income of $500,389. Theatre operations, including film rentals, cost $3,721,901, booking fees to an allied corporation, $322,400, and rent $913,385. The net income was $419,066.

A balance sheet for the subsidiaries not consolidated showed theatre income and miscellaneous receipts of $813,897 and rent of $11,055. Theatre operations, including film rentals, cost $487,273, and booking fees to an allied corporation were $20,441. The net income was $138,636.

General Pictures Raises 1937-38 Production Budget

Fenn Kimball, president of General Pictures Corporation, and Robert E. Welsh, vice-president in charge of production, this week announced they had increased the 1937-38 production budget of the company to $1,850,000. Present plans are for one picture each month during February, March and April, with two productions per month thereafter for the balance of the year.

Rites for Mrs. McKenzie

Funeral services for Mrs. Ina Beattie McKenzie, wife of Maurice McKenzie, executive assistant to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., were held Tuesday afternoon at Crown Point, Ind. Burial was at Salem Churchyard, near Crown Point, where Mr. McKenzie's father, now retired and residing in California, was pastor. Walter Trumbull of the New York MPPDA office and H. C. Hays, brother of the MPPDA head, attended the services.

Charles Morrison has been named head of the talent scout department at Selznick International.

Grand National Takes Educational Studios

In line with his plan to coordinate all production in one studio, Edward L. Alperson, president of Grand National, this week closed with E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Pictures, for the leasing of the Educational studio in Hollywood for a period of 10 years, starting April 1.

Among the Grand National producers are Richard A. Rowland, Douglas MacLean, Zion Meyers and Victor Schertzinger, B. T. Zeidman, Andrew Stone, Max Alexander and Edward Finney. The program this year calls for 44 features and eight westerns in addition.

Jack Barnstyn has been elected vice-president of the company in charge of foreign sales.

Expect 35 Theatres In NY During '37

With 10 new theatres already under construction and with plans either filed or in preparation for more than 25 units, indications are that from 35 to 50 new houses will be opened in the Greater New York area during the coming year. Most of the construction is planned by independent operators or circuits. RKO will build two new theatres, but Loew's announces it has no plans for expansion.

In a number of cases where theatres are in various stages of construction, several of the larger independent circuits have joined together in the financing and operation. The same policy prevailed last year when Century, Randforce and some of the prominent circuit operators put up new units.

New theatre ventures will be of the 600-seat type. The majority of the houses erected last year were of this size, with a few seating from 1,000 to 1,500.

The New York Film Board of Trade's annual theatre directory, which will list 1,164 houses in the Greater New York area, will be ready for distribution either late this week or early next week. The survey will show all theatres wired for sound and less than 100 closed. The 1,164 theatres is an all-time high for the area.

Sears to Talk To Circuit Heads

With a lineup of "major" productions scheduled during the next few months from Warner Brothers-First National, Gradwell Sears, vice-president and sales manager, plans a series of trips over the country for the purpose of contacting the more important circuit accounts.

Merchandising plans as well as playdates will be discussed by Mr. Sears with the major circuit heads. The Warner executive plans to leave soon to outline distribution plans for such impending features as "Black Legion," set for January 30th release; "Stolen Holiday," February 6th; "The Great O'Malley," February 1st; "Green Light," February 20th, and "Penrod and Sam."

New Roxy Capital Disclosed in Plan

The capitalization of the reorganized Roxy Theatre Company of New York will include 15,480 shares of Class A stock and 77,400 shares of common stock in addition to a maximum of $3,595,208 of first mortgage 20 year 3½ to 4 per cent bonds, it was disclosed this week in a final draft of the reorganization plan.

Federal Judge Francis G. Gaffey has set January 29th as the date of the first hearing of creditors on the plan which has been approved by the bondholders committee.

A weekly operating statement for the Roxy for the period from July 2, 1936, to Dec. 24th, discloses that every film which showed a profit of $5,000 or more was produced or distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox. The point is emphasized in the bondholders' committee's letter to depositors as indicative of the importance of the film franchise provided for in the plan.

The 24-week average of film rentals paid by the house, as disclosed in the report, was $6,080; the average profit, $3,497; average weekly receipts, $33,415, and average weekly attendance, 79,475. The first week of "Sing, Baby, Sing," beginning Sept. 17, recorded highs for the 24-week period. The first week rental was $18,832; profit, $14,117; gross, $59,827 and attendance for the week, 142,206.

Low for the period was recorded by "Fatal Lady" during the week ending July 16th. A rental of $2,585 was paid for the picture; a loss of $4,794 was shown on a gross of $18,931 and an attendance for the week of 47,766.

Total profit for the 24 weeks was $83,934; total rental, $145,937; total receipts, $801,966, and total attendance 1,907,399.

Industry Consents To Italian Revision

by VITTORIO MALPASUTTI

in Rome

The official consent of American motion picture companies to the new financial and quota regulations to govern the importation of films into Italy and the withdrawal of revenues from the country was received in Rome this week, concluding the agreements recently arrived at by government representatives, the American State Department and representatives of the American industry.

Under the agreement, the withdrawal from Italy of 24,895,000 lire will be permitted during 1937, 20,000,000 lire of which is earmarked for American pictures. Revenues above this amount are free to be banked in Italy or invested under the sole control by Italian law which applies to the investments of Italian citizens.

The division of the picture import quota specifying the number of American pictures which may be imported has been fixed at 250, according to the wishes of the American companies.

World distribution of "Queen of the Jungle," a 12-chapter serial with Reed Howes and Mary Kornman co-starring, has been acquired by J. H. Hoffberg.

Slim

(Warner)

Drama

From a viewpoint of cast selections alone this production became a matter of more than usual interest. Though the story is melodramatic action and adventure concerned with the lives and experiences of high electrical tension linemen, the sponsoring company must think pretty well of its potential entertainment and commercial elements to feature Pat O'Brien and Henry Fonda in the leading roles. As the gist of the dramatic story is centered about them, the oddly included romance features Margaret Lindsay. Working with this trio are Stuart Erwin, J. Farrell MacDonald, Joseph Sawyer, John Litel and Dick Purcell in the chief supporting roles.

Based on an original screen play by William W. Haines, who did the screen play for "Man of Iron" and collaborated on preparation of "Black Legion," the yarn tells of a country boy whose dream is to become a lineman. Attaining his wish, Fonda becomes a devoted pal of O'Brien's, the best lineman in the business. Together, in their calling, they encounter many hazardous experiences, production detail of which amplify the action and suspense to the fullest. Traveling about the country, Fonda meets and falls in love with O'Brien's girl, Miss Lindsay. There is no romantic conflict, however, the drama of the story being concentrated in the work of the men, which serious injury interferes with only temporarily. Building to a suspense packed climax, there is an element in the finale that can be counted upon really to surprise the customers.

With practically all the action taking place outdoors, the producers have selected Ray Enright to direct the picture. Though previously his association has been mainly with comedy entertainment, principally several Joe E. Brown and Joan Blondell-Glenda Farrell pictures, Enright has had experience with drama in "China Clipper," which also featured O'Brien, and "The St. Louis Kid," a Cagney picture.

Seventh Heaven

Love Drama

First made ten years ago, with Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell in the leading roles, "Seventh Heaven," like "Humoresque," "The Miracle Man" and "Holiday," has come to be a standard by which all love dramas are gauged. Now under the production guidance of Darryl F. Zanuck, with Simone Simon as Diane and James Stewart as Chico, the love story of the pathetic little girl of the squalid Paris pavements, a child just on the verge of womanhood, who spurns the sordid life that has been about her all her years to make one man her life, her world, her seventh heaven, will be told. It is a story of enduring affection.

This version of the Austin Strong story, produced as a stage play by John Golden, before its original appearance as a photoplay, was adapted by Melville Baker, who through experience garnered with such adaptations as those for "Next Time We Love," "The Gilded Lily," "Now and Forever," "The Age of Innocence" and "Zoo in Budapest" is qualified to handle such valuable material. Direction is by Henry King, maker of "Ramona" and "Lloyds of London." Music and lyrics including the famous "Diane" are by Lew Pollack and Sidney D. Mitchell. Merritt Gerstad, who photographed Miss Simon's first picture, "Girl's Dormitory," is the camera man.

To the name value of the widely exploited Simone Simon and that of Stewart, who had many other fine performances prior to "Born to Dance," Zanuck has added a roster of familiar personalities who have the prestige and talent to fit into the various supporting characters. Included are Jean Hersholt, Gale Sondergaard, Gregory Ratoff, J. Edward Bromberg, Victor Kilian, John Qualen, Thomas Beck, Mady Christians, Siegfried Rumann, Rollo Lloyd and John Piccori. In lesser parts Edward Keane, John Hamilton, Georges Renavent, Will Stanton and Irving Bacon will be seen.

Weather or No

(Columbia)

Comedy-Romance

With the intent of producing a laugh provoking comedy romance, Columbia has chosen a humorous story and selected a cast of familiar names to play it. Not being looked upon as anything particularly great or unusual, but nevertheless as entertainment that is worthy of the attention of both exhibitors and patrons, the film adapts a tried and proven plot and narrates it with unique situations, occurrences and characters.

A socially ambitious political ward heeler wants to marry his protege into a blue blooded family. He also wants him elected to Congress. The mother desires the marriage. The girl doesn't. An odd series of happenings brings a visionary, scientific weather forecaster into the yarn. Love and conflict immediately are born for him and the girl. The politician wants rainy weather on election day in order that his candidate will have better chances for election. The candidate wants fair weather in order that he may arrange an outing with the girl that will permit him to cause her to say "yes." Complications ensue that deprive the candidate of his election and his girl, as the forecaster demonstrates that even if it is by accident somebody can do something about the weather.

The story is an original by A. H. Z. Carr, heretofore unidentified as a screen contributor. The screen play is credited to Ethel Hill and Lynn Starling, both of whom have been associated with several similarly comedy atmosphered features produced by this company. Direction is by Alfred E. Green, maker of the recently released "More Than a Secretary."

Ralph Bellamy, currently in "Counterfeit Lady" has the leading role as the weather prophet. The girl is Ida Lupino, recently in "My American Wife" and "The Gay Desperado." The other man is Ralph Forbes. Walter Connolly is the politician and Nana Bryant will be seen as the girl's mother. Other featured players are Granville Bates and James Flavin.

Freedom for Sale

(Columbia)

Drama

The story told in this production is another version of how a policeman and a girl newspaper reporter combine to break up a racketeer ring. Few variations are being made in the familiar basic plot and these, mainly, are brought about by inclusion of thrill action sequences. Following the formula, which of course permits the hero and heroine to fall in love, the girl gets a tough assignment, and the policeman, first accepting a demotion, goes to jail in order that he may be accepted as a renegade cop and consequently will have access to the identity of the racketeer master minds. The plan succeeds romantically and dramatically, to the tune of much melodramatic action.

The motivation is an original screen play by Harold Shumate, adept at this sort of material through long association. Recently he contributed to such films as "Killer at Large," "The Final Hour," "Crash Donovan" and "Dangerous Intrigue." The director, C. C. Coleman, Jr., was at the helm of "Legion of Terror."

Paul Kelly, currently in "Join the Marines," is the policeman and Rosalind Keith is the girl reporter. Thurston Hall is a publisher who first sneers at the pair but eventually becomes their staunch ally. Leaders of the racketeers, and consequently the principal heavies, are John T. Spacey and Francis MacDonald. The brains behind the gang, cast as a supposedly honorable judge, is C. Montague Shaw. Other players who will be seen include Leona Maricle, Gene Morgan, Raymond Brown, Jack Daly and Al Hill.

Dangerous Number

(MGM)

Comedy

To that entertainment vogue popularized by Universal's "My Man Godfrey," "Theodora Goes Wild," Columbia, and its own "Libeled Lady," MGM aspires to add another fluffy flippant comedy. Understood as the label for that sort of amusement the title does not sound so incongruous. It is the manner in which the folk about town slangily might describe the story's heroine.

The original story of Leona Dalrymple, for which Carey Wilson did the screen play, concerns a young man who thinks he is serious minded. Surer of it than anything else, he is convinced that he has got a certain red headed girl out of his life. But the next time he sees her again, he marries her. He doesn't know that she thinks that she already has been married, and thereby the stage is set for a series of hilarious complications.

Robert Young, last in "The Longest Night," and Ann Sothern are paired in the leading roles. Though there are many players appearing in character and atmospheric roles, the principal supporting cast is limited. It features Reginald Owen, whose line of jittery comedy is well known; Cora Witherspoon, remembered for her part in "Libeled Lady"; Dean Jagger, seen in many Paramount pictures; the promising newcomer Marla Shelton, and Barnett Parker. Direction is by Richard Thorpe, maker of "The Voice of Bugle Ann" and "Last of the Pagans," but heretofore associated with more dramatic material.

While not being produced on so lavish a scale as the films listed the producers anticipate that its entertainment quality will place it on a par the worth with them as explosive farce comedy.

The King and the Chorus Girl

(Warner)

Light Romance-Drama

The title definitely hints the topical interest value of this production. While by no means concerned with the recent royal abdication, the fact that it tells the semi-intimate story of a king who quit his job for the love of an American chorus girl gives it a timely character that neither exhibitors or theatre goers will permit to pass unrecognized.

The elements going into it under Mervyn LeRoy's production and direction are romance, drama, comedy, and, unusual for a story of this type, some surprising fast breaking action. The original screen play is by Norman Krasna, recently associated in preparation of the similarly atmosphered photoplays "Wife vs. Secretary" and "Hands across the Table," and Groucho Marx, better known as a comedy actor than writer.

A border king seeks the excitement of glamorous Paris. Momentarily rousing himself from a drunken stupor, he thinks he sees a show girl flirting with him. The adventure awakens a new interest in life for the king, but doesn't create much of an impression upon the girl. Eventually the king's two faithful retainers make a commercial proposition to the girl to enter upon a professional romance. The ruse ripens into real love for both, but when the girl confesses her duplicity and would flee, the king pursues her, to be married aboard ship and take up a new life in America. Numerous amusing coincidences enhance the love theme and situations which develop unexpected consequences happen rapidly.

Fernand Gravet, noted French stage and picture actor, is featured in the king's role. Joan Blondell is the chorus girl. Edward Everett Horton will be seen in the type of role he handles so pleasingly as the king's retainer and advisor. His partner in fixing up the king-chorus girl romance is Mary Nash. Other principals are Alan Mowbray, Luis Alberni, Jane Wyman and Adrian Rosely.

Escadrille

(RKO Radio)

Drama

The story told in this production is of a woman who falls in love with her husband's best friend. The drama of it is not bared until the final climax, with the activities of a French air squadron in the World war. The men, crew of a fighting observation plane, are bound together by the brotherhood of the skies. Against the heroism and heartbreak of war, the production tells the story of a woman who respects her husband but never can learn to love him, and a man whose flaming enthusiasm captures her heart. Husband and wife survive to learn the lesson of sacrifice, trust and love; the boy dies in battle before a tragedy over which he has no control can overwhelm him, his best friend and his wife.

The picture is based on a French story, "L'Equipage," by Joseph Kessell. It is being directed by Anatole Litvak, who made the Continental screen version of the novel about a year ago. The screen play is by Anthony Veiller, who adapted the forthcoming "Michael Strogoff," as well as the well remembered "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford" and "Star of Midnight," by Ethel Borden.

Paul Muni and Miriam Hopkins appear as the husband and wife, and Louis Hayward, seen recently in "The Richest Girl in the World" and "Anthony Adverse," is the other man. The supporting cast, even alongside the three leads, seems to be of more than passing interest from the standpoint of name value. It lists Colin Clive, Wally Albright, Owen Davis, Jr., Paul Guilfoyle, outstanding in "Winterset," Elizabeth Risdon, J. Carrol Naish, Adrian Morris, Alec Craig, Donald Barry, featured in the stage version of "Tobacco Road," Sterling Holloway, Mady Christians, now in "Come and Get It," and Leonid Kinsky, who was featured in the similar war romance drama, "Road to Glory."

Happiness Preferred

(Tentative Title)

(Paramount - Emanuel Cohen)

Drama

A woman sets out to murder a man, but a series of harrowing experiences with him causes her to come to fall in love with him. That is the story told in "Happiness Preferred" (working title). A doctor is falsely accused of murder. The husband of his supposed victim does everything possible to wreck the doctor's career. When he becomes incapacitated, his sister takes up the vendetta. Thereupon ensues a chain of dramatic incidents in which love is born. The climax builds to an inferno of mob hysteria which promises to give the story punch.

The production is adapted from a serial written by Frank R. Adams which appeared recently in Red Book Magazine. The screen play is credited to Doris Malloy and Dore Schary, both of whom have demonstrated in past efforts that they possess the knack of giving dramatic story material screen realism. The film is being directed by Robert Florey, a specialist in the treatment of tense themes.

The leading players are Warren William and Karen Morley. William, following his long association with Warner Bros, was lately seen in "Go West, Young Man." Miss Morley is featured in the current Goldwyn production, "Beloved Enemy." The strength of the principal members of the support is on a par with the leads. It includes the veteran Lewis Stone, Jackie Moran, remembered for his work in "Valiant is the Word for Carrie," Murray Kinnell and Christian Rub. Other players who will be seen are Jonathan Hale, Richard Carle, Esther Dale, John Wray, Thomas Jackson, Virginia Sale and Ruth Robinson.

Film Shipments by Air Increase 130% in Year

Since the inauguration of the air express service of the Railway Express Agency in 1927, motion picture interests, the first to use this method of transportation, have been among its largest and most consistent customers and through it have managed great economies, a review of the history of the service prepared by the Railway Agency points out.

As an instance of the economies effected the company said that although the newsreel companies expend a considerable amount now on air express charges for incoming and outgoing films and prints this amount is only a fraction of the fees which were paid for chartered airplanes in the early days of flying. Greatest service to the newsreel companies, however, and to other distributors is the speedy shipping of prints to theatres in all parts of the country.

The Railway Express Agency began to experiment with air express as early as 1919 but regular service was not begun until September, 1927, coincident with the inauguration of privately operated transcontinental lines. On January 1, 1937 the company had contracts with 20 of the air transport lines in the United States to handle every detail of their express business except the actual flying. The contracts enable users of the service to use the combined shipping facilities of airplane, railroads and fast motor truck and motorcycle pick up and delivery.

That films have been a large factor in the rapidly increasing volume of air express business is shown by the following statistics:

Film shipments for 1936 increased 130 per cent over 1935.

In November, 1936, the total number of film shipments in and out of New York was 3,167; in November, 1935, the total was 1,342.

Shipments of negatives and films weighing 3,028 pounds were forwarded from Los Angeles in November, 1936, and in the same month of the previous year shipments forwarded weighed 1,288.

Commodities of the motion picture industry regularly transported by air range from news negatives weighing a few ounces and flown short distances to hundreds of pounds of properties flown from New York to Hollywood over night. Substantial sums are saved by air expressing hypersensitived raw stock from laboratories to distant locations and almost nightly, sketches of costumes, samples of fabrics and designs for sets are flown across the continent.

Further extension of the service is found, the review points out, in the fact that circuit and independent theatre managers find air express of value in emergencies involving quick transportation of parts to repair sound mechanism and projectors.

What to Do in the Case of an Aperture Fire

by F. H. RICHARDSON

Recently it was requested that "students" set forth exactly what would be their course of action should a fire occur at one of their projector apertures. It was surprising how many began their answer substantially as follows: "I have never had a film fire, therefore do not know exactly what my course of action would be."

Now, that is a wholly, completely wrong answer, though to their credit, that statement was almost invariably followed by setting forth an acceptable line of conduct. However, the above serves admirably as a foundation for a discussion of what is a highly important element in almost all human endeavor, namely preparedness.

In fact, an aperture fire is especially illustrative of the high value of preparedness. We may all agree that when such a fire occurs, it then is hardly a time to pause, study the matter and decide what should be done first. That dread spectre, possible panic, plus the possibility of property losses —and the projectionist considering what he should do first!

Very naturally, all of us agree he should consider that before the emergency occurs, not when it is present. That theatre manager or projectionist who finally raises himself out of mediocrity and rises to the top, is that one who devotes himself to study, thus preparing himself thoroughly to cope with any and all emergencies that may from day to day arise in his work. When friend manager asks a question concerning projection procedure, the really competent projectionist replies without hesitation. His answer is complete and right. When, for example, a new screen is to be installed, he is in position to advise the owner or manager what type of reflection surface will best serve in that particular auditorium, and follow up that advice with detailed reasons as to why it will serve best. He does not stutter and set forth a lot of generalities.

We find entirely too many projectionists equipped with a minimum amount of knowledge. Study is the only solution. Be prepared.

Frank C. Schofield, projectionist of the Liberty theatre in Camden, N. J. writes, "In a recent article you treat of film fires and their prevention, or rather control, but do not speak of breaking the film at upper and lower loops. If a fire starts at the aperture, would not that prevent it from getting into the magazine? How about it? I have had such a fire and by doing this I prevented damage except for the destruction of approximately one foot of film.

"Do you remember when you visited Camden about a year ago and called at our theatre? I told you of a streak in the middle of my screen. Well, after trying about everything that could be thought of, it was found to be due to a halo caused by excess light escaping through the projection room port holes. I reduced the port area by means of a suitable mask and the trouble was cured."

As to breaking the loops, in my opinion much depends upon conditions. The safety of audience is the paramount issue. In my opinion the port shutters come absolutely first—ahead of any and everything else; then the dowser and motor switch. That would be the process I personally would train my mind to follow in case of an aperture fire. If there is no film piled up in the mechanism casing and if the loops can be broken, well and good. But if the film breaks in such manner (as often occurs) that loose film piles up in the mechanism casing, then it will instantly be set ablaze and loops cannot be broken save by the blaze itself.

And right there, it seems to me, lies the whole crux of the matter. Aside from the things named and seeing that there is all possible means available for the escape of smoke, so very much depends upon conditions that no hard and fast rule can possibly be set down as representing best procedure in all cases. It is up to the projectionist to see to it that the fire shutters are down, the dowser down, the projector brought to a halt as quickly as is possible. It then is wholly a matter of his coolheadedness and good sense.

THE MONEY MAKING STARS OF 1936 NAMED BY BRITISH EXHIBITORS

Total of 245 Players in American and British Pictures Are Nominated

by BRUCE ALLAN

in London

SHIRLEY TEMPLE has the same hold on the British public as she has in America as the best Money Making Star of the past two seasons.

Polling British exhibitors for the first time, on lines identical with MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S annual survey addressed to theatremen in the United States and Canada, the London Office of Quigley Publications is presented with figures prepared from such returns as we received in reply to our questionnaire and representing the box office experience of managers of theatres of all classifications, which are as remarkable for their likeness to previously published American results as they are noteworthy for the dissimilarity in other respects.

American stars were graded by British exhibitors in 1936 very much as American exhibitors graded them in 1935. In each case Shirley Temple heads the list; in each list Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers as a team, Clark Gable, Wallace Beery and James Cagney are among the ten leading places, though not in the same order. Dick Powell, Joan Crawford and Joe E. Brown, in the 1935 American list, give way in the British poll to Laurel and Hardy, Greta Garbo and Norma Shearer. That five of those First Ten in America should also appear in the British elect is, however, striking enough in view of the fact that well over 200 star names appear in the British list.

But here the similarity ends. Asked to name "The ten players whose pictures drew the greatest number of patrons to your theatre" in the year ended Sept. 1, 1936, British exhibitors have included two British players in their selections and have placed one of these, Gracie Fields, in third position, after Shirley Temple and Astaire-Rogers, and the other, Jessie Matthews, in sixth, ahead of Cagney, Beery, Miss Garbo and Miss Shearer.

Separately listing the Ten Money Making Stars of British pictures, exhibitors confirm the rankings for Gracie Fields and Jessie Matthews by placing these two artists first and second. The placings of other British stars are likely to be a surprise to Americans, who will find Jack Hulbert and George Formby, the last-named unknown in the United States, declared to have been better box office than such British players as Robert Donat, fifth in this list, and George Arliss, seventh, who came to British films with the advantage of reputations already made in American productions. There is an indication in this tabulation of the extent to which British production has established itself by purely British values, but even greater significance may be read by American interests into the fact that in the all-films vote the British Gracie Fields closely approached the vote of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers.

The Winners:

Shirley Temple	First
Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers	Second
*Gracie Fields	Third
Clark Gable	Fourth
Laurel and Hardy	Fifth
*Jessie Matthews	Sixth
James Cagney	Seventh
Wallace Beery	Eighth
Greta Garbo	Ninth
Norma Shearer	Tenth

 Players in British productions.*

Taking into consideration the fact that Shirley Temple represents an altogether exceptional universal interest, the growth of British star values is all the more pronounced in the poll. The seven-year-old actress is far ahead of all the other Americans in the voting. But for her, a British star very closely approaches America's leader.

Large as is the vote for Miss Temple, it still underestimates her appeal in the British market. Returned forms carried such remarks as "Easily first" and the still more eloquent comment: "We did not play a Shirley Temple picture in this period, or she would have topped them all." Unanimity was especially marked in the votes from Scottish industrial areas.

Of other general comment in the returned forms, the most interesting referred to British films. It was singularly diversified. There were such remarks as "No drawing power in British films" (Middlesex), "British films used only to meet quota needs" (Dundee), "They were all bad" (North London), "Too unpopular to be graded" (Essex). But these were countered by "British stars always draw best at this house" (from a Worcester exhibitor who gave British stars the first ten places), and "Fifty per cent better than any others," of Gracie Fields, from a Berkshire manager. In 40 per cent of the forms returned the British questionnaire was unanswered.

Below the Astaire-Rogers rank the grading is fairly close. The appreciation of the Astaire-Rogers team was very emphatically shown, in all parts of the British field.

Appearance of Gracie Fields in third place may be a surprise to America, where, even after her personal visit, her films do not appear to have had any great success, but England would have taken her appearance even at the top of the poll as a reasonable reflection of her enormous box office pull in her native county of Lancashire and her great popularity in all districts. The career of this British star is covered in a later reference to the poll of British players.

Clark Gable is third of the American stars as he was in America's 1935 vote; his position reflects a stable box office position in the United Kingdom. The same may be said of Laurel and Hardy, who did not appear in the American first ten but have been dependable box office here right back to their two-reeler days. On a personal tour four or five years ago they stopped the traffic in every British city they visited.

Jessie Matthews, if "It's Love Again" had been generally released here, as it was in America, probably would have been even higher than sixth, but on the year's releases she is ranked, both in the general and in the all-British polls, second to Gracie Fields, though by no very great margin.

The interesting point about the relative position of these two artists is that the one British woman player who has established herself in America through the medium of British films does not quite equal the British success of an actress whose appeal is more or less limited to England.

The Cagney, Beery, Garbo and Shearer rankings, with very slight steps between them (practically a dead heat in the case of the last two) can be left to speak for themselves, with the exception of this comment: they stress the fact that a British "best ten" recognizes substantially the same American values as an American list; of the 1935 American placings only the late Will Rogers could be classed as an American value only.

In the few instances of individual rating of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Astaire had the larger number of votes. Half a point is added to the team vote for each individual mention, but the individual rankings were not credited with any of the team votes.

In the rankings that follow, prepared from such returns as we received in reply to our questionnaire, the percentage represents the relation of the points accorded to each artist, on the basis of ten points for a first place down to one for a tenth place, to the total number of points for all artists. Asterisks designate players appearing in British pictures.

POLLED SEPARATELY ON BRITISH STARS

The final placings of British stars in the poll starting on the next page were arrived at by consideration solely of the votes placed in the ballot for British Money Making Stars only. They refer to different totals from those in the All-Star (that is, regardless of country of origin of the product) and the Western polls.

Sought in this questionnaire was establishment of comparative box office appeal to the British theatregoer of players in product made by British producers.

The Money Makers of 1936 In British Productions

Gracie Fields and Jessie Matthews Lead in Poll of the Showmen

The Winners:

Gracie Fields	First
Jessie Matthews	Second
Jack Hulbert	Third
George Formby	Fourth
Robert Donat	Fifth
Jack Buchanan	Sixth
Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn	Seventh
Will Hay	Eighth
George Arliss	Ninth
Sydney Howard	Tenth

Polling the total points awarded by British exhibitors in selecting the money making British Stars of 1936, Gracie Fields registers an even more emphatic triumph in this ballot than that of Shirley Temple in the All-Stars vote, though her next rival, Jessie Matthews, is closer to her than were Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in the All-Star.

Gracie Fields' success is an interesting illustration of the extent to which British production has drawn on reputations already established in other forms of entertainment. Every one of the first 10 in the British stars poll has a stage record, but whereas it would be true to say of some of them that a stage reputation has been the passport to real fame through the screen, in the case of Miss Fields her celebrity as a screen star is a continuation and emphasis of a fame which has made her the biggest variety attraction in England for a number of years past.

Gracie Fields' Career

Born in Rochdale in 1898, Gracie Fields made her stage debut as a vocalist at a local cinema in 1911, later touring in Archie Pitt's revues "It's a Bargain" and "Mr. Tower of London," which ran in the provinces for seven years and introduced the singer to London, at the Alhambra, Leicester Square. Later she played opposite the late Sir Gerald Du Maurier in "S. O. S." at the St. James's theatre, and soon established herself as a West End star. She made her first film, "Sally in Our Alley," at the ATP studios, Ealing, in 1931, and has followed it by "Looking on the Bright Side," "This Week of Grace," "Love, Life and Laughter," "Sing As We Go" and "Look Up and Laugh," with "Queen of Hearts" scheduled as the last picture under her ATP contract. In the fall of this year it was said that she had had several offers to go to Hollywood.

Jessie Matthews

Jessie Matthews, already established as an American screen value through her last picture, "It's Love Again," played her first picture, "Out of the Blue," for BIP in 1931, after stage experience in C. B. Cochrane shows (she was one of his "Young Ladies") which made her one of the finest dancers in England. In 1932 and 1933 she made five British pictures, "Her Radio Romeo," "There Goes the Bride," "The Midshipmaid," "The Man from Toronto" and "The Good Companions," and at the end of that period went to Hollywood for Twentieth Century-Fox under its reciprocal deal with Gaumont-British. In 1934 she made for G-B "Friday the Thirteenth" and "Evergreen," and in 1935 "First a Girl." In 1936 she made "It's Love Again" and was midway through her first film under the direction of her husband, Sonnie Hale, "Head Over Heels," when she was stricken with the illness from which she is at present recovering. That illness also caused abandonment of her American tour, for which a series of radio appearances had been arranged under the management of Michael Balcon.

Jack Hulbert

Jack Hulbert, portraying a stage type not unlike that popularized in American films by Claud Allister, was one of the established favorites of the British light stage who provided the first British talking picture producers with ready-made box office reputations. He was in the earliest British screen revue, "Elstree Calling" (BIP, 1929) and later played "Sunshine Susie," "Jack's the Boy" and other Gainsborough-G-B features. He has paid a visit to the States to study American reactions to British humor, and for the last three years has cooperated in the authorship and direction of several G-B pictures. He is the brother of Claude Hulbert and husband of Cicely Courtneidge, playing in British productions.

George Formby

George Formby represents a new screen value in England and one still unknown to America, but in his case also the basis is a stage reputation of the very first rank in the English industrial midlands. The son of a Lancashire comedian of the same name who was one of the very biggest stars of the great days of British variety which ended with the War, George junior started life as a jockey, riding for Lord Derby at the weight of 55 pounds. He began his career as a music hall comedian under the name of George Hoy, but went back to his own when he was sufficiently established to tour his own shows concurrently riding in motorcycle "dirt track" races. He was an established star in revue, pantomime and variety before making two small films, followed by a first big success in "No Limit" and "Keep Your Seats, Please." Like Gracie Fields, a Lancashire artist, Formby is nowadays one of the biggest box office values in British films, outside the "West End," and is another demonstration of the fact that the big money from British films is in the provinces.

Robert Donat

Robert Donat, an international rather than a British artist perhaps, owes his prominence in the British ballot largely to his work in "The Thirty Nine Steps" and "The Ghost Goes West," and conversely the success of these pictures was undoubtedly due to his inclusion in the cast, after his American-made screen reputation. In any poll of British women patrons Donat undoubtedly would be in the first three.

Jack Buchanan

Jack Buchanan, another woman's star, is a stage celebrity and famous dancer and a peculiarly British value, judging from the reception in America of some of the films in which he has been starred. Owner of the Leicester Square theatre and his own stage producer, he has just put on in the West End a song and dance show, "This'll Make You Whistle," which already has been filmed by Herbert Wilcox Productions.

Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn

Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn purvey, in a very close transcript of stage farce, the type of humor which made the Aldwych theatre famous when, with Yvonne Arnaud and Robertson Hare, the same team occupied it year in and year out with material written by Ben Travers, who also writes the always witty, and very English, scripts from which the Walls-Lynn films, big British draws, are made.

Will Hay

Will Hay made his name a variety star in a turn which provided the raw material for G-B's "Boys Will Be Boys," with Hay in the schoolmaster role known to nine out of 10 Britishers through repeated broadcasts. In the opinion of good judges, Hay is a potentially great character actor.

George Arliss

George Arliss comes into the British list because of his series of films for Gaumont-British, of which "Mister Hobo" and "East Meets West" are the most recent.

Sydney Howard

Sydney Howard is yet another instance of a revue comedian purveying in films exactly the type of humor which already has made him a public favorite on the boards. Such films as "Up for the Cup" and "Girls Please" have been considerable box-office draws in England, where Howard's reputation has been widely enhanced by his screen work.

BRITONS NAME BIGGEST WESTERN DRAWS

Twenty-seven players in Westerns were named by British exhibitors in a separate poll of the Money Making Stars in that field. Buck Jones, named the greatest box office attraction in Westerns, was followed in order by these stars, closely grouped: Ken Maynard, Tim McCoy and George O'Brien.

While a number of British showmen confused the Western, definitely circumscribed in the American exhibitor's mind, with the entire outdoor field, the reports returned showed a wide range of interest. As expected, all players awarded points are in American product.

The British showmen actually presented thirty-eight players in nomination in this field, but eleven of them are eliminated from this listing because, while they have appeared in pictures of the out-of-doors, none of their product is truly Western in American definition.

Following are the results of the British poll of the Western players of 1936, with comparative placing and the percentages:

The Leaders

Buck Jones	First	873
Ken Maynard	Second	593
Tim McCoy	Third	543
George O'Brien	Fourth	503
John Wayne	Fifth	281
Dick Foran	Sixth	252
Tom Mix	Seventh	245
Randolph Scott	Eighth	244
William Boyd	Ninth	228
Hoot Gibson	Tenth	197

Honorable Mention

Gene Autry	191
Tom Tyler	184
Tom Keene	89
Buster Crabbe	88
Harry Carey	41
Bob Steele	24
Frankie Darro	21
Bob Custer	19
Charles Starrett	15
Jack Perrin	11
Noah Beery, Jr.	10
Lane Chandler	9
John Mack Brown	6
Jimmy Ellison	6
Richard Talmadge	5
Jack Hoxie	5
Buddy Roosevelt	3

Precisely the same procedure was followed in conducting the poll of Western players as in the questionnaire relating to the Money Making Stars of all product shown in Great Britain and the one on stars of British pictures.

While a number of exhibitors replied that they did not use Westerns, many did respond, and indicated that where that type of product is an attraction the audience tastes cover comparatively as wide a range as in other fields of film production.

30 MILLION PARAMOUNT PRODUCTION BUDGET

Exhibitor Partners' Ideas on Product Figure in Conference in Hollywood

Outlining in elastic form a 12 months filmmaking program which will entail an expenditure of $30,000,000, Paramount Pictures' executives from both coasts and from abroad on Saturday completed the company's annual production conference.

The sessions were held at the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles, taking advantage of the fact that all chief executives of the company and its theatre associates were in that city following Thursday's studio celebration in observance of founder Adolph Zukor's 25th year of leadership of the Paramount organization. (Pictures of the Zukor Jubilee banquet appear on pages 12 and 13.)

Balaban Cites Policy

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount, presiding over the meeting with Mr. Zukor and William LeBaron, managing director of production, outlined the position and policy of the company as follows:

"The company, by reason of the general elastic production program outlined here today for 1937 and 1938, launches the most ambitious and well-planned picture schedule of its history.

"This schedule is aimed in one direction, to entertain the public through the medium of the box office. We have set aside for this purpose a starting appropriation of $30,000,000 with which to accomplish the result we all are determined to achieve. This figure is not arbitrary. Neither is our planned program. We will change costs, casts and stories as the fancies of the exhibitor and the public dictate but such changes, if any, will be calculated to bring about new records in our own particular field."

Cooperative Spirit: Zukor

Adolph Zukor, as chairman of the board of directors, said:

"During the last few months the studio has operated on the basis that the exchange of ideas, regardless of their source of origin, inevitably must bring benefits to the company as a whole. When Paramount produces outstanding pictures such results reflect on everyone in the studio and throughout the entire Paramount organization regardless of individual station."

Mr. Zukor also pointed out that the sessions marked the first time any large studio had offered the opportunity to exhibitor partners to voice their opinions and desires in formulation of a 12-month production program, "a departure based on the obvious fact that no group is better able to reflect the wants of the public than the theatre men."

William LeBaron spoke in detail of the company's immediate situation and of plans for the future. He pointed out that the studio has pictures ready for release, editing or in production which will meet all bookings through May and that his staff now has enough stories in hand to carry through beyond the requirements of an 80-picture program.

LeBaron Emphasizes Product

"No studio ever has been in such a gratifying position," Mr. LeBaron said. He pointed to Paramount's product ready for release, naming such productions as "Champagne Waltz," the "Silver Jubilee" picture starring Gladys Swarthout; the Gary Cooper-George Raft co-starring picture, "Souls at Sea," being directed by Henry Hathaway; the Frank Lloyd production, "Maid of Salem," co-starring Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray; "Swing High, Swing Low," with Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray; the Barbara Stanwyck-Joel McCrea production, "Internes Can't Take Money"; "Waikiki Wedding," with Bing Crosby, Martha Raye and Bob Burns; "I Met Him in Paris," a Wesley Ruggles production in which Claudette Colbert will be starred; the Leo McCarey production, "The Years Are So Long," from Josephine Lawrence's book, and the Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein II musical, "High, Wide and Handsome," which has just gone into production with Irene Dunne starred under Rouben Mamoulian's direction.

Mr. LeBaron also spoke of Paramount's reserve of story material, much of which is in work. Among them he listed "The Count of Luxembourg," in which Gladys Swarthout will be starred; "Bag of Tricks," the W. C. Fields starring comedy which the comedian will start March 1; "The Long Traverse," history of the North Canada frontier; "Artists and Models," in which Jack Benny will be starred; "Show Business," an all-star production now being written by Fannie Hurst; "The Life and Loves of Victor Herbert," which probably will co-star Gladys Swarthout and Fred MacMurray; "National Velvet," from Enid Bagnold's story; "Carnival," which will star George Raft; "You and Me," with Sylvia Sidney starred; "Wells Fargo," of the western frontier; "The Life of Houdini"; "The Old Maid"; Mark Twain's "The Mississippi Bubble"; 'Lady Godiva"; "To Have and to Hold"; Gilbert Gabriel's drama, "I, James Lewis," and other subjects.

New Talent Developed

As for players, Mr. LeBaron pointed out that the company in the last few months has developed such talent as Frances Farmer, recently co-starred with Edward Arnold in "Come and Get It"; Dorothy Lamour, featured in "The Jungle Princess" and now with Carole Lombard in "Swing High, Swing Low"; Olympe Bradna, because of her work in her first featured role opposite George Raft in "Souls at Sea"; Ben Blue, who next will be seen in "High, Wide and Handsome"; Ray Milland, featured in "Three Smart Girls," "Bulldog Drummond Escapes" and others; Shirley Ross, now playing the lead opposite Bing Crosby in "Waikiki Wedding"; Akim Tamiroff who rose in "The General Died At Dawn" and who next will be seen in "Outcast," with Gail Patrick and Ricardo Cortez, and Franciska Gaal, new European importation soon to be launched on her American screen career.

Attending Paramount's meeting from the studio were Adolph Zukor, Eugene Zukor, William LeBaron, A. M. Botsford, Melville Shauer, George Bagnall, A. C. Martin, Henry Herzbrun, Jacob Karp, Manny Wolfe, Boris Morros and Sam Frey. From New York were Barney Balaban, Y. Frank Freeman, Neil Agnew, Russel Holman, Robert M. Gillham, Austin Keough, Vincent Trotta, Charles Gartner, Albert Deane, George Weltner, Joe Unger, Charles Reagan, Milton Kusell, John Graham, John Hicks, Jr., and Walter Cokell. Sunday Showing Petition Delayed

Action on a proposal for Sunday motion pictures in Delaware was deferred at a meeting of circuit and independent theatre managers at Harrington, Del., last week. The question was referred to the laws and legislative committee, appointed at the meeting and a report will be made at the next meeting, scheduled for the end of this month.

One proposal to be considered by the committee would provide local option while another would legalize Sunday showings throughout the state. A labor unit of theatre employees recently voted approval of Sunday shows, the exhibitors were told.

The meeting brought together for the first time the members of the Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Delaware and the Eastern Shore of Maryland and representatives of the two major circuits operating in Delaware, Loew's and Warner Brothers.

William Ripley, Longview, Wash, exhibitor and president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington, presided this week over the first of the regular monthly luncheon sessions of the organization. The meeting was held in the quarters of the Nortwest Film Club in Seattle and was attended by 35 exhibitors.

The first annual convention of the Hollywood branch of the Independent Theatre Owners of America will be held on January 25th at the Ambassador Hotel.

George McL. Baynes has acquired distribution rights in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, the British Dominions and Argentina for "Golgotha," French film depicting the Passion of Christ.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

ADVENTURE IN MANHATTAN: Joel McCrea, Jean Arthur—Good entertainment. If all are as good as this one, we have nothing to worry about from Columbia. —Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

LEGION OF TERROR, THE: Bruce Cabot, Marguerite Churchill—Fair picture that failed to draw for us with heavy exploitation.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

MAN WHO LIVED TWICE, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Isabell Jewell—Our second Columbia from the new group, and a mighty good program picture. Has a good plot and interest never lags. Looks like a good season for this company. Shuler and Ingram, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

THEODORA GOES WILD: Irene Dunne, Melvyn Douglas—Another grand hit for Columbia. Looks like another "It Happened One Night." Properly exploited, this picture will make plenty of money. You can't go wrong on this one. It will stand extra playing time. Congratulations, Columbia, on this fine production.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

First National

CASE OF THE BLACK CAT, THE: Ricardo Cortez, June Travis—Excellent mystery drama keeps them guessing. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 17. —A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

CAPTAIN'S KID, THE: Guy Kibbee, Sybil Jason—A pleasing picture for a small town and rural patrons. Sybil should sing more. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Christmas Day, December 25.— A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

CAPTAIN'S KID, THE: Sybil Jason, May Robson, Guy Kibbee—A swell picture. Sybil Jason is certainly good; as for May Robson, she is tops. Guy Kibbee gives his usual good performance and altogether it is a very pleasing feature. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 25-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CHINA CLIPPER: Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts—A darn good show. No business but no fault of the picture. Weather bad. Played December 17-18. —J. R. Long, Bocanito Theatre, Scottsboro, Ala. General patronage.

CHINA CLIPPER: Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts—Very good aviation story with Pat O'Brien just a little bit harder boiled than usual. Aviation pictures please here and this seemed to click. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 5-6. — Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CHINA CLIPPER: Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts—Here is a picture. Beautiful shots of the China Clipper. A very nice story around the trans-Pacific flights. It did extra business for us.—Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Not up to the standard. Many more like this one, Powell will be a goner. Played November 13.—J. R. Long, Bocanito Theatre, Scottsboro, Ala. General patronage.

STAGE-STRUCK: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—This was the poorest Warner musical we have played to date and we have played them all. The picture lacks romance, and the rehearsal routine is tiresome. Blondell badly miscast.—Arcade Theatre, Middleville. Mich. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Eric Linden—A story of a family life, as new as tomorrow. A boy going bad by the influence of a golddigger, but returning back to straight life and making good. A show full of heart throbs and comedy situations enacted by Wallace Beery. Good even if we did run it too late. Running time, 10 reels. Played December 27-28.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Rockefeller Center, New York

DEVIL DOLL, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan, Frank Lawton—Very unusual picture that will please most any audience. Lionel Barrymore as an old woman was very good. Our patrons liked the picture. Played October 21.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

DEVIL IS A SISSY, THE: Freddie Bartholomew, Jackie Cooper, Mickey Rooney—A picture everyone shoul see. Very entertaining from start to finish. You can't go wrong on this one. Played November 26-27.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

DEVIL IS A SISSY, THE: Freddie Bartholomew, Jackie Cooper, Mickey Rooney—A picture not at all extravagantly produced, but one that pleases all kinds of people from the kids to their grandparents; and that is the sort the exhibitor needs. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 25-26.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

FURY: Spencer Tracy, Sylvia Sidney—A very good drama, wonderful acting, a gripping story. One of the best dramas we had from Metro this year. It's a pity that our censors got busy on this one and had cut out all the mob scenes, which are the strongest spots in the picture. With "Kaili's Hawaiian Troubadours" on the stage, I had a very good all 'round program and everybody was very pleased, including the cashiers. Played October 25-27.—C. Goldin, Majestic Theatre, Hong Kong, China. Neighborhood patronage.

GORGEOUS HUSSY, THE: Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore—My idea of the best picture of the year. Good story, perfect cast, beautiful costumes. Just about everything for perfect screen entertainment. I consider this the best of Lionel Barrymore's always good performances. I saw this show four times and would pay to see it again. Regret to say, however, it did not make the hit with the cash customers that it did with me. Costume shows do not go over very well here, but I still say it is a swell show. Running time, 105 minutes. Played November 25-26.—Gladys E. McArdle. Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GORGEOUS HUSSY, THE: Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor—One of the finest attractions we have played this year. Did more business second day than the first, which is very unusual for this town. Nothing but praise from our patrons on this one. Played November 19-20.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

HIS BROTHER'S WIFE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Taylor—Good performance of a fair story. Seemed to please. Running time, 89 minutes. Played November 28-29.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HIS BROTHER'S WIFE: Robert Taylor, Barbara Stanwyck—Splendid offering. Robert Taylor very good and Miss Stanwyck well cast. Held up fine in spite of carnival as opposition. Played October 22-23. Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

KELLY THE SECOND: Patsy Kelly, Pert Kelton, Charley Chase—Well, MGM has broken through once again with the laugh hit of the season. Here's one show you should play on a Friday and Saturday. A splendid program picture with laughs from start to finish. Kelly a riot. It will build itself up the second night. —D. E. Kolb, Municipal Theatre, Millheim, Pa. Country patronage.

KELLY THE SECOND: Patsy Kelly, Charley Chase, Pert Kelton—Personally I couldn't see anything at all to this one but judging from the roars of laughter it is what they want. Anyway, it pleased the cash customers one hundred per cent and they are the ones who count. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 25-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala, Lotus Long—A very good picture, specially for this country. All stories about natives are very successful here. Played this one with "Audioscopiks" and Laurel-Hardy comedy on the National Chinese Holiday (October 10th; called here "Double Ten") and packed the house full during three days. Running time, 8 reels. Played October 10-12.—C. Goldin, Majestic Theatre, Hong Kong, China. Neighborhood patronage.

OLD HUTCH: Wallace Beery, Cecilia Parker—Just what the others have said. Very fine human interest picture that pleased all who saw it. Wallace Beery tops in this type picture. Played December 25.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

OUR RELATIONS: Laurel and Hardy—A dandy. No dull moments. Pulled like a plaster. Running time, 8 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

PERFECT GENTLEMAN, THE: Frank Morgan—A very good program picture, good for any night. Lots of comedy by Frank Morgan and very satisfactory entertainment. Better than lots of so called specials, full of five minute kissing scenes. Running time, eight reels. Played December 23.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Music that enchants and re-echoes from the lips of the audience for days; drama that plucks the heartstrings; a cast that does credit to MGM's roster; and scenery which makes even the worst of us gather, for a time at least, the feeling which inspired in Joyce Kilmer his immortal "Trees"; all that, and more, that's this latest version of "Rose Marie." Despite the fact that the hero is a "policeman," the production went over with a bang here. All of which means that to your, and your and your audience this will be a treat you will have to search far to equal. Thanks, Leo, and a Big MGM New Year! Running time, 109 minutes. Played January 1-2.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy—"San Francisco" is a great picture. Gable, MacDonald and Tracy all give splendid performances. The earthquake scenes are unusual, to say the least. Played December 10-12.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen Neb. Small town patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald—We endorse everything good said about this picture. It is tops. Pleased 100 per cent and drew way above the average. Played December 13-14.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone—Good film fare for almost any audience, splendidly acted and produced for a box office natural —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone—Very good. Our patrons were loud in their praise of this picture. We can always count on Leo. Played October 15-16. —Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

SWORN ENEMY: Robert Young, Florence Rice—A swell gangster story, well played and directed. This little Rice girl is a honey. Running time, 78 minutes. Played December 23-24.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THREE WISE GUYS: Robert Young, Betty Furness—Program picture with a good cast that drew average business and pleased. Robert Young and Betty Furness make a fine team. Played December 11-12.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

UNGUARDED HOUR, THE: Loretta Young, Franchot Tone—A good mystery picture, but too much dialogue for our Chinese patrons. Very good acting by Franchot Tone, but Miss Young rather cold in this one. My foreign patrons liked the picture, but not the Chinese. Had to pull it off after two days. Business below average. Played October 18-19.—C. Goldin, Majestic Theatre, Hong Kong, China. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

AND SUDDEN DEATH: Randolph Scott, Frances Drake—Just a fair program picture. OK for one day, Bank Night or a Saturday. Played December 16—J. R. Long, Bocanito Theatre, Scottsboro, Ala. General patronage.

ARIZONA RAIDERS, THE: Buster Crabbe, Marsha Hunt—One of the best Zane Grey Westerns released by Paramount this year. The only objection to these classy westerns is, they are too short and you are obliged to use too many shorts to fill out the bill. Played December 4-5.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, THE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll—A very fine picture that barely grossed film rental. Our patrons seem not to care for this type picture—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

GO WEST, YOUNG MAN: Mae West, Warren William, Randolph Scott, Alice Brady—Our nomination for the ten worst pictures of the year, and no excuse with the splendid supporting cast. Few turned out and most of them walked out on the picture. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 23-24.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Rural and small town patronage.

HIDEAWAY GIRL: Shirley Ross, Martha Raye, Robert Cummings—The producers have done a good job and you can use this picture in any position on the week and it will fit okay. Martha Raye is so near tops, there is no doubt about it, and it looks like from where I stand that the very next picture she is in will be biggest box office of all of them. If the next one she is in is equally as good as this one, everyone will be more than satisfied.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LITTLE AMERICA: Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd—Here is another educational that should be sold to schools, not to the theatres. Very interesting travel picture, good photography, but no entertainment. Business terrible. Fellow-members, beware. Played October 28-29.—C. Goldin, Majestic Theatre, Hong Kong, China. Neighborhood patronage.

MOON'S OUR HOME, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda—Good love story enjoyed by all and both Margaret Sullavan and Henry Fonda put the show over in great thrill when skiing in the mountains. Just right for December 25. OK. Running time, nine reels. Played December 25-26.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MOON'S OUR HOME, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda—Better than the average program picture. Followed "Rhythm on the Range" and the latter got all the business. Played December 27-28.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MY AMERICAN WIFE: Francis Lederer, Ann Sothern—This may not be listed among the ten best pictures of the year among the nation's film critics, but it certainly delivers 100 per cent satisfaction as real entertainment. Our patrons seemed delighted with this. Played this New Years. While it was no record breaker, we did satisfactory business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby, Bob Burns, Martha Raye—A real show that pleased 100 per cent. Bob Burns great. Crosby good as always and a newcomer, Martha Raye, brought out plenty of laughs. We recommend this 100 per cent entertainment for all classes. Drew a fine holiday business. Played December 25-26.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS, THE: Fred MacMurray, Jean Parker—This picture brought us many favorable comments, and proved to be a very satisfactory box office attraction.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS, THE Fred MacMurray, Jean Parker, Jack Oakie—One of the biggest outdoor productions. Did not do the business we expected, but all who saw it were well pleased. We should have played it on Friday-Saturday. Played October 29-30.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

THREE CHEERS FOR LOVE: Eleanore Whitney, Robert Cummings—Oh, boy, this is a swell picture. Book it, if you can get it before it's too old. Would like many such pictures if I could get them before they grow a grey beard, but, of course, the independents have to wait until the chains get tired of them. At least, that seems to be the case with Pompano. Everyone well pleased. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 22.—Fred J. Case, Pompano Theatre, Pompano, Fla. General patronage.

THREE CHEERS FOR LOVE: Eleanore Whitney, Robert Cummings—Just a program picture with two clever youngsters, Eleanore Whitney and Robert Cummings, doing some dancing. Not much of a story. Played December 18-19.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

VALIANT IS THE WORD FOR CARRIE: Gladys George—Here is another one of those finest performances this year and it was delivered by Gladys George. But I am asking you what is the benefit of delivering the finest performance of the year to empty seats? This new screen personality, Gladys George, should have a future screen appearance, but she like McLaglen, is a problem for the producers to work out, but here, best wishes to both of them.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WEDDING PRESENT: Joan Bennett, Cary Grant—"Wedding Present" is good entertainment. Joan Bennett, in my estimation, is about as clever as any of the stars. I should like to see her given a really big part.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen Neb. Small town patronage.

WIVES NEVER KNOW: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—This picture is rather nutty and not too strong. Some situations are very amusing.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

Republic

GHOST TOWN GOLD: Robert Livingston, Kay Hughes—Congratulations, Republic, on another top notch western. Even better than the first of this series. Give your patrons something different in westerns with this series. You won't regret it.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

OH, SUSANNA!: Gene Autry, Frances Grant—When a better western is made, we would like to see it. This one has everything it takes to make good entertainment, and Gene didn't put his hand on his gun. Congratulations, Gene. Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

PRESIDENT'S MYSTERY, THE: Henry Wilcoxon, Betty Furness—This picture is a credit to the independent producer. They made a good all-around drama out of this. While it is not gigantic, it is good substantial drama and holds interest all the way. This was doubled with "Charlie Chan at the Race Track", which I consider an extra good Chan picture. Business on this program for a Sunday and Monday was a good average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RIDE, RANGER, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Fair action picture.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

RIDE, RANGER, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Extra good Autry picture that pleased everyone. This series has good stories, good music and action to please the most rabid fan. You can't go wrong with Autry.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

RIDE, RANGER, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—A good western to play on a double bill. This combination of singing and riding seems to please. We have not had any good recording on any of our Republic pictures so far. Played November 28-29.—Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

SITTING ON THE MOON: Roger Pryor, Grace Bradley—A fair musical that seemed to please. OK for one day.—J. R. Long, Bocanito Theatre, Scottsboro, Ala. General patronage

THREE MESQUITEERS: Robert Livingston, Ray Corrigan—We were reluctant to book this series and tried this one as spot booking. When we say it is one of the best westerns we have played we are not kidding, and did we make a rush for the next one. We predict this will be one of the greatest outdoor combinations to grace the screen. Bob Livingston reminds us of the late Ferd Thomson. Played November 14.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

TICKET TO PARADISE: Roger Pryor, Wendy Barrie—A fair program picture. OK for one day.—J. R. Long, Bocanito Theatre, Scottsboro, Ala. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BRIDE WALKS OUT, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—Played Sunday. Enjoyed thoroughly, to above average business. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BRIDES WALKS OUT, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—A nice little comedy drama, punctuated with some snappy gags which are not moth-eaten nor threadbare. It is not what anyone could call a super production, but it will please your patrons better than many pictures that are so styled We ran into bad weather with it, but it is doing all that could be expected of it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 1-2. — G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming Community patronage.

FANG AND CLAW: Frank Buck—An interesting educational picture, but our public lost interest to this kind of pictures. What they want is entertainment, not education. This picture is not as good as previous Buck's pictures. Even our Chinese patrons, with whom this kind of pictures were always very popular seem to get tired of them and did not come. Business below average. Played October 23-24—C. Goldin, Majestic Theatre, Hong Kong, China. Neighborhood patronage.

PLOT THICKENS, THE: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Unusually good murder-robbery picture. However, I am in favor of prohibiting any producer from making more than one murder or gangster picture a season. There's too many of them. Running time, 7 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

SMARTEST GIRL IN TOWN: Ann Sothern, Gene Raymond—Nifty little comedy drama. Running time, 6 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

SWING TIME: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Unless Astaire and Rogers do something else besides dancing well, you guess the rest. Business not so hot on this one. Failed to please.—J. R. Long, Bocanito Theatre, Scottsboro, Ala. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

AMBASSADOR BILL (RE-ISSUE): Will Rogers—This reissue drew better than average business, but not what we expected. Our town is too small for reissues, as too many patrons do not care to see any picture the second time.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea—Swell show. More people told me they liked this than any show in months. Patronage better than average. Played December 31-January 1.—R. L. Sherman, Strand Theatre, North Branch, Mich. Small town patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea, Walter Brennan—Personally considered this an outstanding picture and our patrons raved over it. It is vastly different from anything we have played. Walter Brennan stole the picture and is he good. Congratulations, Mr. Brennan. Played December 28-29.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

CAN THIS BE DIXIE?: Jane Withers, Slim Summerville—Regardless of so many adverse reports, this went over good. Running time, 75 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

CAN THIS BE DIXIE?: Jane Withers, Slim Summerville—We Southerners got a laugh out of this one. We do not agree with exhibitor Ralph Cokain on this one, as our patrons liked it very much. Maybe it's because we are too dumb to know any better. Light entertainment, it's true, but seemed to please most everybody.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple—Compares favorably with early release by this popular little lady. She is still in the top classification at the box office. Drew 50 per cent over average business. Played November 25-26.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—Here's one show that should never have been released. Shirley climbs to the top of the ladder, and now some bozo knocks the ladder out from under her. If Fox soon don't give this little star a break, well, we'll have to take down our "S. R. O." signs. We always bring back Temple pictures, but not this one; if we did, the house would be empty. Entire story weak.—D. E. Kolb, Municipal Theatre, Millheim, Pa. Country patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—Very disappointing Temple picture that our patrons failed to see either, because they had heard how weak it was, or because they are tired of Shirley. Hope "Stowaway" is better than this one.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irvin S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—A very good program picture that did no business. Lacked star value.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LADIES IN LOVE: Janet Gaynor, Constance Bennett, Loretta Young, Simone Simon—The few customers we had stopped on the way out to ask us what the picture was about. Leave it off and you won't be sorry.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

PEPPER: Jane Withers, Irvin S. Cobb—Lively comedy that kept the audience in an uproar. Nothing big but seemed to please everyone. Played November 23-24.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

PIGSKIN PARADE: Stuart Erwin, Patsy Kelly. Yacht Club Boys, Judy Garland—Here's a dandy little football picture with just enough catchy tunes to put it across. Not much of a story, but it still will bring them in, and send them away happy. Fox has a NEW star if they only wise up to the fact before it's too late, and some other company beats their time. Little freckled-face Judy Garland gives the folks something to talk about. Everyone here keeps asking, "When will that little freckle-face girl be shown again?" She sure has something that the public in general likes, and, after all, the public is keeping our theatres open. If Fox will give Judy the right kind of a show, they will have all the Simone Simons they'll need. Judy will build herself up in no time.—D. E. Kolb, Municipal Theatre, Millheim, Pa. Country patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple —Shirley always pleases one hundred per cent, but the story in this is not so good. Very good cast but the print was old and in poor condition. However, they never complain when Shirley plays. Running time, 79 minutes. Played December 19-20.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Loretta Young, Robert Taylor—Here's one made to order. Step on it. Will please all classes.—J. R. Long, Bocanito Theatre, Scottsboro, Ala. General patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Loretta Young, Robert Taylor—Double-billed this with "Oh, Susanna!" and this combination did a nice business. "Private Number" is a very good story and well done by Taylor.—Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

RAMONA: Loretta Young, Don Ameche—One of the finest pictures of the season. Color as clear as black and white. Much praise from our patrons. It's a pleasure to show pictures like this one. Played November 5-6.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

REUNION: Dionne Quintuplets—Outgrossed "The Country Doctor." Built for small towns. Patronage "tops." Played December 24-26.—R. L. Sherman, Strand Theatre, North Branch, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROAD TO GLORY, THE: Fredric March, Warner Baxter, Lionel Barrymore, June Lang—Generally considered excellent entertainment. Only objections received were from people opposed to war films. Good business. Running time, 101 minutes. Played December 25-26.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Rural and small town patronage.

ROAD TO GLORY, THE: Fredric March, Warner Baxter, Lionel Barrymore—We thought this the best war picture of all time. Our patrons were divided in their opinion of the picture. Everyone should see it. Played November 11-12.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

ROAD TO GLORY, THE: Fredric March, Warner Baxter—A war picture that is a war picture. If this was intended as a grim reminder of the horrors of war it succeeded, but if it was intended as entertainment that is another story. Any possible horror left out in other war pictures was included in this. Such entertaining bits as shooting one's own man to get him out of his sufferings, blowing a couple of platoons to bits, having one of the heroes go blind and then blown to bits, etc. Just imagine how the women would flock to see this if shown some of these scenes in the advance trailer? For my part, I ran no trailer on this, just told them the name of the picture and the stars and was glad when this playdate was past.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ROAD TO GLORY, THE: Fredric March, Warner Baxter, Lionel Barrymore—A powerful war story. Played during Christmas week and did poorly. No fault of the picture.—Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

SING, BABY, SING: Alice Faye, Adolphe Menjou—For the first time in my life, words fail me. You will have to see this picture to realize how awful it is. No story, no stars, absolutely nothing to recommend it, and Fox called it a special. If anyone liked this one, they forgot to tell me. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 23-24.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SING, BABY, SING: Alice Faye, Adolphe Menjou, Ted Healy, Patsy Kelly—Drew better than average and pleased all. Personally, did not care for some of it, but the patrons were satisfied and that's all that matters. Played October 19-20.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

SONG AND DANCE MAN: Paul Kelly, Claire Trevor—A below average program picture and so was the business. Paul Kelly is not suited for the part; he is very good in parts of racketeers and should stick to them. Claire Trevor is sweet, but could not save the picture from flop. The silent version was much better. Played October 6-7.—C. Goldin, Majestic Theatre, Hong Kong, China. Neighborhood patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Good show spoiled by five minute kisses and clinches. The better class or sensible adult were in turmoil everytime of the long scene of kiss. Business below average and we are glad of it. We won't hear so many complaints. Running time, 10 reels. Played December 20.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—A very beautiful love story that will not register at the box office.—Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

UNDER YOUR SPELL: Lawrence Tibbett, Wendy Barrie—Pass this up, unless your people like Tibbett. No one likes him here. Plenty of walkouts. No business. Played December 20-21.—R. L. Sherman, Strand Theatre, North Branch, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHITE FANG: Jean Muir, Michael Whalen—Better than average entertainment. Not as good as "Call of the Wild." Not the star value. Played December 5-6.—Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHITE HUNTER, THE: Warner Baxter, June Lang—Good for double bill. Patronage average. Played December 27-29.—R. L. Sherman, Strand Theatre, North Branch, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHITE HUNTER, THE: Warner Baxter, June Lang, Gail Patrick—Fair picture. Not up to the usual standard. All right for double bill. Played December 26.—Shuler and Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and CCC patronage.

United Artists

DODSWORTH: Walter Huston, Ruth Chatterton, Mary Astor—Thought this a grand picture but why, pray tell, will producers build a picture with a musical undertone during a large part of the running time which very badly hampers the speaking parts? During the early run of the picture, it was almost impossible to understand Miss Chatterton. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 27-28.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DODSWORTH: Walter Huston, Ruth Chatterton—Too much show for small town. Too good. Huston wonderful. No business. Played December 20-21.—R. L. Sherman, Strand Theatre, North Branch, Mich. Small town patronage.

GAY DESPERADO, THE: Nino Martini, Ida Lupino—Very fine singing picture with just enough comedy and thrills to satisfy those who do not care for the classical singing. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 25-26.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE: Randolph Scott, Heather Angel, Bruce Cabot, Binnie Barnes—We thought the picture was very good and heard no complaints, but the women stayed away. Either because it was just before Christmas or they thought it too rough. However, we still did average business. The cast was well selected and left nothing to be desired from that angle. Played December 20-21.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE: Randolph Scott, Binnie Barnes—An excellent picture from the story by James Fenimore Cooper. This follows the story quite closely and has a very good cast, beautiful scenery and seemed to please. Was a little too realistic for some of the ladies but it brought some of the men who seldom come to a show. A great picture that is educational as well as entertaining. Running time, 91 minutes. Played December 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MELODY LINGERS ON, THE: Josephine Hutchinson, George Houston—A very sad story of a mother who lost her child in the first reel and could not find it till nearly the last reel. Incredible and even silly in parts, but all the lady patrons liked it. Hutchinson miscast and so was John Halliday. George Houston was killed so soon after the beginning of the picture that he had not enough footage to make impression. Business below average. Running time, 10 reels. Played October 13-14.—C. Goldin, Majestic Theatre, Hong Kong, China. Neighborhoood patronage.

Universal

MAN I MARRY, THE: Doris Nolan, Michael Whalen—In spite of the fact that this one was cast with a lot of good names, it fails, and why? Because every situation is forced and it grows so tiresome before the end that one is struck with the idea, why did they make it? Doris Nolan certainly does not deserve the billing they gave her; a star overnight is not made any more with billing. Exhibitors, give this two days middle of week and you won't be sorry, but not a run.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MY MAN GODFREY: William Powell, Carole Lombard—An outstanding picture which lives up to the praise given by reviewers. Carole Lombard overacts considerably and no man as portrayed by William Powell in this picture would hardly marry one who acted as silly as Carole Lombard, but as good fun it can be accepted. Gail Patrick was stunning in this and practically all who took part in this deserve high praise. I played this on Christmas day to satisfactory business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MY MAN GODFREY: William Powell, Carole Lombard—William Powell at his best. Story very funny. Good entertainment. Played November 26-27.—Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones—Remarkable picture that satisfied both patrons and exhibitor. These are pictures that build business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

YELLOWSTONE: Henry Hunter, Judith Barrett —A very interesting melodrama, while some may find the plot somewhat improbable, but that will hardly be noticed by those who like real action drama and their numbers are many. Andy Devine gives a lot of good comedy relief in this and some of the scenes in Yellowstone Park would make up for many shortcomings of the picture. As a whole I would class this as above average action thrill drama. I played this too close to holidays for any extra business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Warner Brothers

CAIN AND MABEL: Marion Davies, Clark Gable —Not so hot for a rural community. Songs not so catchy. Dancing sets wonderful. Running time, 10 reels.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

CAIN AND MABEL: Clark Gable, Marion Davies —Was afraid of this one, but it wasn't too bad. Average business. Fairly satisfactory comments. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 27-28.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Rural and small town patronage.

CAIN AND MABEL: Marion Davies, Clark Gable —Think Vitagraph is falling down terribly on its musicals. Especially is this noticeable in the patronage they are drawing. Hardly enough people in to see this or "Stage Struck" to pay house nut. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 20-21.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CAIN AND MABEL: Marion Davies, Clark Gable —A very good picture that seemed to please. Played December 14-15.—J. R. Long, Bocanito Theatre, Scottsboro, Ala. General patronage.

CALIFORNIA MAIL: Dick Foran, Linda Perry—Another very good western. Dick Foran is becoming quite popular with the western fans. Running time, 56 minutes. Played December 9-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

COLLEEN: Dick Powell—A few more like this will kill this star. They are falling down on musicals. A few more like "Footlight Parade" would pep them up. Running time, nine reels. Played November 28.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

GIVE ME YOUR HEART: Kay Francis, George Brent—This one pleased the ladies. Kay Francis gives her usual excellent performance and the story is good. A woman's picture, however. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 16-17.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC ENEMY'S WIFE: Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—The woman's side of the "Public Enemy" racket, with a very good cast that pleased the patrons. Running time, 69 minutes. Played December 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Where your feature is a comedy use one of these and you have a fine program. Running time, two reels.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

EVERY SUNDAY: Tabloid Musicals—Best of this series, but a bad print with a center streak made the singing lady appear as though she was swallowing a sword.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

FOLLIES OF 1936: Our Gang—A good Follies show for everybody, young and old. We played this for a Christmas children's matinee and we sure gave them their money's worth, I hope, because we gave it to them free. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN PIE COMPANY: Chic Sale—Good one-reeler full of comical situations. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

OLD HOUSE, THE: Happy Harmonies—A colored cartoon that would have sent me howling home when I was a kid but did not frighten the more sophisticated youngsters of 1936. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PAN HANDLERS: Patsy Kelly—Good Patsy Kelly comedy. She always gets the laughs. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Go to it, Popeye, you're OK. Running time, one reel.— Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MUSICAL FASHIONS: Ina Ray Hutton and her Melodears—Thought it one of the poorest band numbers we have played for some time. Miss Hutton sang, Miss Hutton played the trombone and Miss Hutton danced, and if you ask me I think Miss Hutton likes herself. Running time, one reel.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IN THE MORGAN MANNER: Russ Morgan and Orchestra—Here is a swell band number with several fine vocal selections. Mr. Julian sang "Rendezvous with a Dream" beautifully and a young lady also sang two numbers very creditably. Running time, one reel.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

LET THE OTHERS SPEAK UP

There is little more this pen may add here to what your Chairman already has had to say about the Quigley Awards. It is fitting therefore in the first month of the fourth year of the Project to set down, as a cross-section of opinion, some quotes taken from expressions already published in these pages and forwarded by executives who are serving as 1937 Judges, by theatremen who have taken part. Here they are:

Undoubtedly do stimulate development of manpower.

Record of results over period of years speaks for itself.

Winners stand out above the crowd and may well be proud of the distinction.

Foreign offices take great interest in the Awards. Aids grosses in the foreign field.

Incentive for theatremen to put their best foot forward.

Rescues many a clever theatreman from oblivion.

Affords vigorous incentive to exploitative talent.

Increased grosses in many theatres.

Distinction comparable to the Academy Awards.

Help exhibitors make more money.

Virile medium of achieving bigger and better grosses.

Brings out showman's merchandising qualities.

Quigley Plaque immeasurably increased my prestige.

Enhanced my standing in the community.

Had much to do with my promotion.

The strength of any project depends in the final analysis upon the value placed upon it by those it most directly affects. Pithy and pertinent, the above lines speak many volumes in fixing the hard and honestly-won position of the Quigley Awards Competitions in the estimation of the motion picture industry.

LESSONS IN SHOWMANSHIP

Question: You've got a picture with a new star opening on Christmas Day. The usual customers are neck-high in holiday shopping, the newspapers are giving most of their time and space to Yuletide activities. The tried-and-true methods of ensnaring and holding attention seem to be out. So what does a manager do to break into the papers, to cause box-office excitement for the star, the picture?

Answer: From Morris Rosenthal, Loew-Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., on Deanna Durbin in "Three Smart Girls."

Rosenthal arranged with the Universal Hollywood studios to have Deanna Durbin on Christmas Eve over long-distance sing carols to children in local orphan asylum. Prominent citizens, including former mayor, took part, papers sent reporters. Stunt went off in grand shape, everybody pleased, story carrying all theatre credits broke all papers as did four-column cut of the party.

Question: You've got a date on a strong attraction. It's right smack in the Christmas buying rush. You try to land an ace window but merchants are utilizing every bit of space to advertise their wares and the odds against promoting any worthwhile display are heavy. What does a manager do to overcome this obstacle and to secure display space in most prominent main street window?

Answer: From Bert Jackson, Fox Theatre, Corning, N. Y., on "Reunion."

Jackson realizing the Quins' display value, approached one of the best stores in town. After a neat bit of selling he convinced the Big Boss that cutouts of the Dionne Quins and a few credits spotted around the main window Christmas display would prove to be a whale of a crowd-stopper. The tiein worked as expected, the window drew throngs, the merchant was gratified, the picture got a break, the cost was nil.

Question: What's showmanship?

Answer: Definitions of showmanship are many and to these may be added the above two examples which, accurately defined, mean: "If it can't be done one way, there's always another," for that's what showmanship is—and no foolin'.

Comerford Circuit Meeting Launches "Winter Carnival"

Chairman Makes Address and Samples Scranton Hospitality

by A-MIKE VOGEL

This is a story of a homecoming, a toothache, reindeer steaks and a convention, all but the aching molar stemming from the trip made last week by your Chairman to Scranton to meet up with Comerford theatre executives and managers brought together for a circuit meeting at the Hotel Casey.

The homecoming, so to speak, brought memories stretching back a long span of years when this scrivener dolled up in one of your Uncle Sam's snappiest uniforms, was deposited upon the nearby hills of Tobyhanna in the dawn of a chill November day to await sailing orders to France which came, of all times, on Christmas Day. To ward off the cold during the interim, aforesaid snappy uniform was immediately exchanged for overalls in which the strugglers for democracy exercised ice-chilled frames by digging deep, deep ditches for water pipes from whence strangely enough no water ever flowed.

Scranton was the blessed spot the gallant soldiery descended upon to make weekly contact with water (hot) and to receive the hospitality of generous Scrantonians who lived in houses with running water and steam heat, who fed hungry and moneyless privates.

Well, the war is over but Scranton is still peopled with the hospitable, foremost among whom are to be listed those Comerford folks in charge of the meeting and headed by genial John Nolan. With this circuit executive and Bill Cronin, your Chairman departed from the New York Comerford offices and took occasion to celebrate the journey upon the Lackawanna's 4:45 by breaking out with an old-fashioned down-home toothache. Kindly ministrations by Nolan and Cronin alas availed nothing. The cure was effected only by the spectacle of a matron from Elmira across the table in the dining car who was struggling with a reindeer steak.

Met by Welcoming Committee

It seems that the dining car chieftain with the fabulous hope of making the menu more of a thing of beauty had devised steaks from the haunches of some valiant buck far from home, and the lady who expressed herself ever ready to try anything once, cast the die. But not John Nolan, nor Bill Cronin, nor even Mike Vogel, for after regarding with high interest the unequal tussle between woman and beast, they ordered ham and eggs. And, glory be, as the chance-taker tossed in her knife and fork, the toothache disappeared. (Slogan: "Cure that ache with reindeer steak.")

Then with locomotive coughing its last cough up and down the Pocono hills, the train came to rest in Scranton, where Ernie Schmidt and Joe Elicker with some of the city's keys acted as escort to the Casey. The Comerford-men got to work and your Chairman got to bed.

The next morning John Nolan opened the proceedings before the scores of theatremen assembled for the occasion from near and far. Mr. Nolan expressed the regrets of Frank C. Walker, Comerford circuit vice-president and general manager, who could not be present. Your Chairman, called upon to address the folks on advertising and exploitation, declared it a real privilege to meet up with so representative a gathering and spotted quite a number of Round Tablers and other contributors to the pages. The boys were kind enough to pay attention.

Others heard during the morning session included Harry Spiegel and Ed Simonis, of Scranton, Fred Perry of Binghamton and John Galvin of Wilkes-Barre. These speakers were all heard with interest, Galvin bringing forth a flock of laughs with his witty remarks. After lunch the boys were photoed in groups and until the afternoon session started we had the opportunity before traintime to renew old friendships.

Publish New House Organ

Scheduled after "chow" was the unfolding of the circuit's 10-week "Winter Movie Carnival," for which prizes have been offered managers, assistants and personnel of winning theatres showing best percentage increase over designated quotas during the 10-week period. Talks were listed by John Nolan, Wm. E. Schmidt, John Roberts, J. J. O'Leary and other executives.

And a further surprise, that rates a paragraph in itself, was the first issue of "The Way-Up," new house organ, to be published weekly by the drive committee and edited by Ernie Schmidt and Joe Elicker. It's a honey of an eight-page job, printed on de luxe coated stock, and how the boys went for it.

Before leaving, arrangements were also made for the circulation around the Comerford houses of Quigley Awards campaigns to allow managers an opportunity of studying the prize advertising and exploitation ideas submitted by the winning entries.

Then with a final hail-and-farewell to the gang, a dash to the train and back to New York with no "aches or steaks" but missing the company of the good folks who sponsored the short but enjoyable visit with a lot of people we'd been a long time wanting to meet.

Ray Milland Receives Key to City of Portland

Arranges Portland Welcome For Paramount Star Visit

They greet visitors with a kiss in Portland, Me., according to the plant arranged by Manager Harry Botwick, of the State, as part of the reception to Ray Milland, Paramount star, who stopped off in the Maine key city in the interests of the Zukor Jubilee Drive. Accompanied by Bill Erbb, Paramount New England head, and Harry Browning, M & P theatres publicity director, the star was met at the station by A. J. Moreau, M & P district manager, Botwick and J. Harold Stevens, local Paramount branch manager plus of course newspaper reporters and photographers. And here was the spot Harry selected to have a local girl step up and give the star a hearty welcoming "buss" which was duly snapped and planted in the next editions.

For the rest of the day and the following, Milland was stepped around plenty. He was interviewed over the air and on the stage by Botwick, photographed at the City Hall receiving the key to city (see photo) by the city manager, presented with gold fishing and hunting license by the Governor, lunched with the press, posed by the Maine Development Commission for the yearly state book and again back to the theatre to present the State Theatre's holiday benefit show receipts through prominent legislator to the local fund.

To give some idea of all the ace publicity garnered by Botwick in advance and during the visit both on the star and for the Jubilee, the first story broke on Nov. 29th, and publicity up to and including the personal appearance ran right up to Dec. 16th, topped by photo layout and two-column story.

DECEMBER SILVER PLAQUE TO SWEDEN

Stockholm Showmen Awarded Final 1936 Top Honors; Bronze to Kansas Manager

With the results of the voting in the Quigley Awards for December, final month in the Competitions for the year of 1936, the Project becomes even more international as the Judging Committee selects for the month's Silver Plaque the campaign on RKO Radio's "Follow the Fleet," put on successfully for the Swedish premiere at the Spegeln Theatre, in Stockholm.

The entry was forwarded by Wilhelm Sorenson, publicity manager for RKO Radio Films in Sweden, and was engineered by Olof Anderson, general manager of the Spegeln Theatre, a unit of the Svensk Filmindustri circuit.

And as the voting makes possible a Plaque "first" for Sweden, the judges' decision also establishes another Plaque "first," with the December Bronze honors going to George Hunter, manager, Fox-Orpheum, Atchison, Kansas, the first Kansan to so click. Hunter did the trick on his excellent campaign for Columbia's "Theodora Goes Wild."

Two First Mention Certificates are listed in December. Jack A. Simons, manager, was thus recognized for a smart entry on "Winterset" at Loew's Poli, Hartford, Ct. And James M. Totman, manager, Warner Theatre, Erie, Pa., takes these bows for his good work on the road show date for MGM's "Romeo and Juliet." Totman is a previous Plaque winner and Simons has also been listed high on the honor rolls.

Sixteen theatremen share in the 13 Honorable Mentions voted in December, three publicity directors sharing with managers for the Certificates. And from the results, the month's returns find the selections made in the majority from theatremen who have previously participated in the Competitions. Two are newcomers to the Awards, Boyd Scott, of Iraan, Texas, and S. Ganguli, of Calcutta, India.

Theatremen outside the American borders include Walt Davis and Jack Nelson, from Canada, and among the overseas entrants in addition to Mr. Ganguli, are to be found Rene LeBreton and Andre Agramon, of Paris, J. L. Stiles and Arnold Wheatly, of Australia plus of course, the Silver Plaque recipient.

The December Judging winds up the year's Awards with 24 winners of the Silver and Bronze Plaques now to be voted upon for the Grand Awards. Plans are now in work for the annual Judging in which it is expected that as previously top names from among the industry will convene to study the Plaque entries. As soon as the winners are announced, final arrangements will go forward in Hollywood for the reception and presentation with United Airlines all prepared to carry the fortunate theatremen to Studioland as guests of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Deadline for January is set for midnight, Tuesday, February 9th, when all entries to be eligible must be received at Quigley Awards Headquarters. Please be prompt.

As was stated in a previous issue, the monthly deadlines for 1937 would be delayed somewhat so as to make sure all entries would arrive in time for consideration by the Judging Committees. With the extra days added there should be no reason for entrants to miss out for this cause.

Herman's Carnival Giant Lobby Cake

Herman Sells "Carnival" With Giant Lobby Cake

Members usually promote those giant-size cakes to celebrate theatre anniversaries but Joe Herman with the assistance of his aid, D. Julian, worked out the stunt to inaugurate his "Winter Carnival of Hits" at the Embassy, Brooklyn, N. Y. Lettering in the best cake-manner started at the top tier (see photo) plugging the "Carnival" and on the next tier was inscribed, with other copy on the steps below and shields on the very bottom carrying theatre name.

Cake was six feet high, 48 inches wide. Nine hours were required to dress it, including real icing and flowers. Icing took 200 eggs and 50 pounds of sugar.

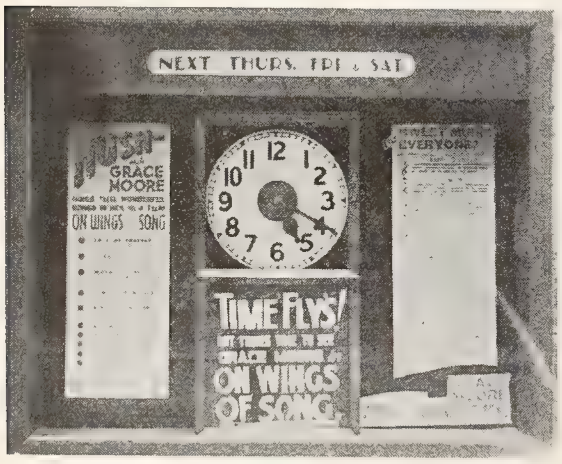
Clock Front Attracts On "Wings of Song"

Over in Barrhead, Renfrewshire, England, Manager W. A. Agnew, of the Pavilion Theatre, worked out a number of attractive displays in the theatre on "Wings of Song" (English title for "One Night of Love"). Conspicuous was a clock idea (see photo) with the center panel given over to a large time piece, motor-driven hands revolving around dial every five minutes tied in with copy reading: "Time Fly's, but there's time to see Grace Moore in, etc." To left and right were titles of the various songs in the picture and prominent critical praises.

Among the window tie-ins that were effective included a photo angle on film developing at drug store, picture being used to stress this service with the line: "See Grace Moore's voice here, hear it at, etc." The "wings" slant was also helpful in tieing in with bicycle store window showing new models of bikes and copy reading: "You'll sing as you wing, etc."



Agnew's Clock Display for "Wings of Song"

Charninsky Shock Lobby Attracts on "Terror"

Much attention was attracted to his front on "Legion of Terror" by Louie Charninsky, at the Capitol. Dallas, with the aid of real black snake whips spotted on six-sheet boards (see photo). Black-hooded giant figure above boxoffice was another 'stopper' and further atmosphere was created with a street bally of hooded man.

On "North of Nome," Louie got himself a break by borrowing a number of husky-dog puppies from the Little America show after closing of the midway of the recent Texas Centennial. The dogs were shown out front for four days and proved a good draw as the papers had run much publicity on the fact that their poppa and mamma had been in the Antarctic with Admiral Byrd. Papers ran picture of pups and tied in the picture to the bally.

Radio tiein for further traffic-stopping (and you know, Louie specialises in that) is a "man on the street" broadcast over KLRD from the sidewalk in front of the Capitol. Put on daily from Monday to Friday, 6:15 to 6:30, different subjects are discussed each night with the theatre included in all announcements and mentioned in the Dallas Times-Herald.

Lobby Displays Sell "Carrie" for Petch

For his lobby display on "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," Ernie Petch, Strand, Brandon, Man., Can., had his sign artist build a giant book. For the cover design he cut out illustrations from one-sheet posters and inside pages were covered with a number of black and white stills with painted-in play dates. Another lobby display was blowup of Alexander Woolcott with his review on the picture, this was set in shadow box with stills.

Libraries were supplied with bookmarks, imprinted blotters with cut were delivered to offices, merchants came through with full-page co-op ad, part of page devoted to articles for women and restaurants distributed imprinted napkins.

Dallas Stages "Glory" Date As Civic Plea for Peace

With the war in Spain as his inspiration for the movement, David Dallas, Griffiths' City Manager in Holdenville, Okla., exploited his date on "Road to Glory" as a plea for peace with the aid of various civic associations, schools and newspapers. Parade was arranged by the American Legion post and war veterans admitted free to see the picture. Members of the National Guard cooperated by furnishing equipment for a militaristic lobby and in uniform stood guard out front. Dallas spoke before the Parent-Teachers Association explaining the story and the personnel in a nearby CCC camp were admitted at a special rate.

Local paper put out a special "Road to Glory" edition and merchants were tied in with mention of the picture in their ads. Displays of war relics, rifles were arranged in prominent windows and further publicity was obtained by announcements on a department store radio program. Red arrows pointing to the theatre were placed on downtown windows and sidewalks stenciled.

Charninsky's "Black Legion" Front

Stolte Projects Title On Ceiling of Theatre

A little different stunt to exploit "Give Me Your Heart" was used by A. B. Stolte, Paramount Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, when he projected a special slide on the ceiling in blue with stars and clouds, giving title, cast and playdates. Clouds were projected by effect machines and moved continuously to heighten the effect.

Large display sign was placed at head of bridge centrally located, 140-foot mounted banner was planted on river wall directly below theatre and lucky number napkins were distributed at drug stores, who also pasted hearts with playdates on mirrors.

Visits Out-of-Town Schools To Publicize "Dream" Date

That was quite a bit of travel put in by Manager Artie Cohn, of Warner's Queen, Wilmington, Del., to make personal contacts with school heads on "Midsummer Night's Dream." In addition to visiting the local secondary and high schools, Artie made the six county schools and visited nine other towns in the drawing area for the same purpose. In each instance principals were prevailed upon to have announcements made in classes and posted on bulletin boards. In Wilmington, permission was granted for the first time on any such tiein, according to Cohn.

Every important woman's club was contacted personally as were other leading organizations. Newspapers contributed special full-page feature stories and editorials. Cohn also landed a number of fine windows on the date, outstanding being a furniture store that gave over one of the largest windows in town (see photo) and space was also obtained in the power company's windows, called best spot in town.

My Quigley Awards Honorable Mention Certificate hangs in my office. Many strangers visiting me have remarked about it, wanting to know what it is for. Maybe, they think I'm a big shot. Anyway, I'm proud of it, because it was damn hard to get.

ERNIE PETCH

Manager, Strand and Capitol

Brandon, Manitoba, Canada

I think Quigley Competitions are a great incentive to bigger and better advertising campaigns and as a consequence are an urge for a manager to do better selling jobs on his pictures. I have a number of Honorable Mentions and certainly cherish them.

I have every reason to believe that our company Executives look through this column each month and appreciate the efforts made by managers to win awards

"GRIFFITH THEATREMEN AMBITIOUS TO PLACE"

It seems to be the ambition of every manager and assistant in the Griffith Amusement Co., R. E. Griffith Theatres and Consolidated Theatres, Inc., circuits operating 177 theatres, to place in the Quigley Awards. I am 100 percent for the idea, believe it well worth while. Our circuit gives ample publicity to all winners in the weekly bulletin. I have also received letters of congratulation from partners and managers over the circuit. . . .

At the recent regional meeting my Award winning entry was displayed. I talked about the campaign and the entry was also given a display and explanation at the annual convention of M.P.T.O.A. in Oklahoma City where over 300 exhibitors were present. . . .

I think it helps the prestige of any manager to win an Award. If he is on his toes he is on the alert for more effective ideas particularly on those he desires to enter in the Competitions. My campaigns are better handled now—with a definite object in view.—L. A. CHATHAM, Manager, Sooner Theatre, Norman, Okla.

LOUIS FRISCH

Treasurer, Randforce Amusement Corp.

Please be advised that I will be glad to serve again as a Judge on the Committee for 1937.

MATT SAUNDERS

Manager, Loew's Poli

The Quigley Competitions act as a strong stimulant for managers, assistant managers and publicity men. Efforts to have an outstanding and unusual campaign are put forth to the utmost and the result is increased box-office grosses.

RALEIGH W. SHARROCK

Manager, Palace and Rialto

Morrilton, Ark.

I sincerely believe that Quigley Awards give theatremen results unobtainable by any other means. It is an excellent medium for stimulating better box-office grosses and to encourage the exploitation efforts of men in the field to obtain the "maximum results at the minimum cost."

We of the Rialto Theatre are proud of our First Mention and four Honorable Mentions that we have received and we believe they have aided greatly in improving our situation.

GLENN H. NELSON

Manager, Warner Bros.' Harris

Findlay, Ohio

". . . Any manager who enters into the Quigley Competitions does himself a world of good even though he does not receive a Quigley Award.

I have entered the Quigley Competition several times. I have read all the campaigns that have taken down the Plaques and began to think that I didn't have a chance to win one. Why? Because I am located in a small city with a small advertising budget. Nevertheless I kept on trying and this year was rewarded with a Quigley Bronze Plaque and the big surprise was that it was won without any big expenditure. This proves conclusively that a Manager does not need a lot of money but he does need an alert mind.

The local and county newspapers carried stories on my award and the presenting of it by the Governor. This publicity enhanced my standing in the community and made me better known in the territory.

SONNY SHEPHERD

Manager, Lincoln

Miami Beach, Fla.

The Awards are a grand stimulant in encouraging managers to compete for honors in the field of publicity and exploitation. While they directly may not be responsible for building better grosses, indirectly they are responsible for putting many extra dollars into the boxoffices. . . .

E. W. SPARR

Manager, Bucklen

Elkhart, Ind.

I cannot praise too highly the value of Quigley Publications and their prize awards both for box-offices and personal prestige. I personally feel that it offers any exhibitor fortunate enough to acquire an Award a guide by which he can judge the value of his everyday efforts.

To me, Mike, they're the "tops."

LESTER STALLMAN

Manager, College

Bethlehem, Pa.

Participation in the Quigley Awards by anyone has a marked stimulating effect on box-office grosses. An excellent campaign is necessary to win an award or to be among the Honorable Mentions—those good campaigns mean "gold" at the box-office. Too, the business of non-participants is greatly aided by your publishing the campaigns of the winners each month, for there is always plenty of material that can be used.

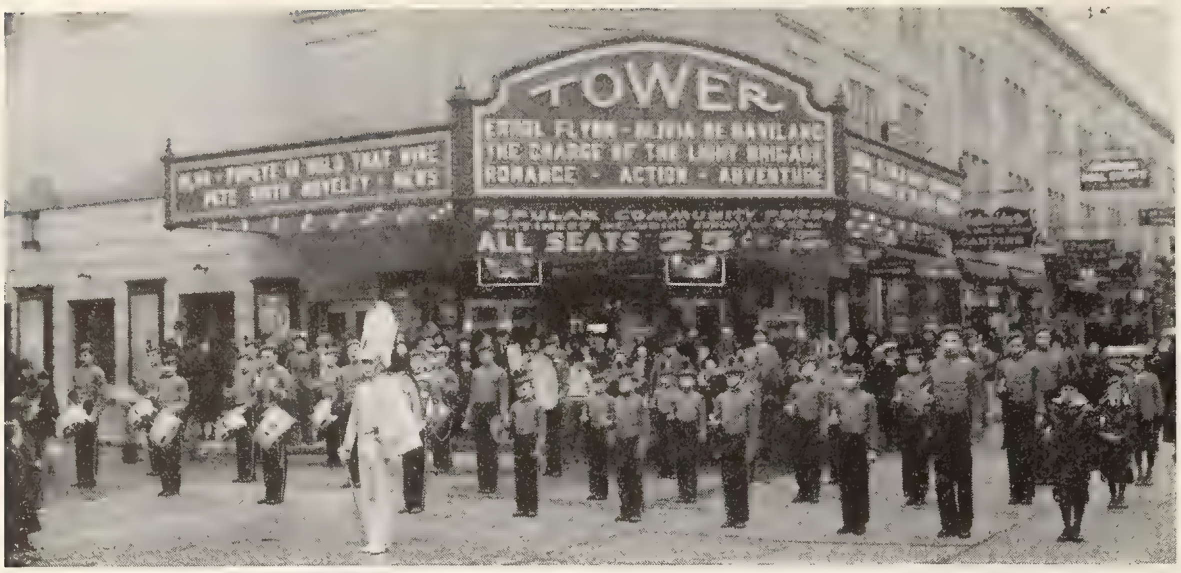
My winning the Bronze Plaque for May and Honorable Mention in February immeasurably increased my prestige.

EVERETT A. STEINBUCH

Manager, Loew's State

Cleveland Ohio

There's no question but that the Awards are a great stimulant for the boys to get out and get an extra push at the old wheel.



DOUGHERTY'S AMERICAN LEGION JUNIOR CORPS PARADE TIE-IN

AUSTRALIANS EFFECT FINE EXPLOITATIONS

Lawton and Flynn from Sydney, Wahlquist in Melbourne, Put Over Smart Advance Drives

Despite the local ordinances against street ballyhoo, display of banners in streets or on fronts, that was a keen campaign on "Sky Parade" put together by Mel Lawton, general manager, Prince Edward Theatre, Sydney, Australia, in association with Herman E. Flynn, ad manager.

One of the strongest draws proved to be a model airplane contest, and as Jimmie Allen, star of the picture, also appears on a current radio program, "The Adventures of Jimmie Allen," sponsored in that territory by Pepsodent, much additional cooperation was obtained to obtain further publicity. Thousands of heralds were distributed announcing the contest rulings and the prizes, first being an air trip to Brisbane, some 500 miles distant. Heralds were distributed house to house, to schools, etc. Through the tiein with the sponsor, mention was made of the date and theatre for three weeks ahead and on another station, weekly program put on by local model plane building association was also linked to the theatre competition. Newspapers gave much space to the contest and as a further buildup, children attending special morning show with guardians received autographed photos.

Wahlquist Sky-Sign "Night" Stunt

To attract the notice of flyers at the Kingsford Smith airport, a private preview was given for the aviators and their associates. It was widely attended and produced a lot of good publicity. Extensive outside billing, trailers, special programs and other effective devices were also provided for.

Contest Idea in Melbourne

In Melbourne, at the Capitol, Eric E. Wahlquist, for "Give Us This Night" also struck upon a questionnaire contest conducted in a souvenir theatre program, readers being asked to name the Paramount pictures in which certain listed songs appeared. This followed the drive directed to the attention of local music lovers in which special letters were mailed to symphony orchestra subscribers, music teachers and competitors in the annual Melbourne Musical competitions. Lobby also carried out the music note motif and atmosphere was conveyed by continental decorations such as fishing boats, etc. Over the boxoffice an animated medley of colored revolving music notes drew further attention.

All newspaper advertisements featured the note motif and as the story had an Italian background, ads were taken in the local Italian journal. Found effective too was tiein with leading paper in which drawing of the stars were placed on over 3,000 contents bills and supplied to every newspaper in Victoria. Radio was employed to plug the hit numbers and tiein made with leading ballroom to feature the music. Stills and posters were placed around the orchestra to emphasize the hookup and music stores tied in for elaborate displays.

To cover entire metropolitan area, special broadcast was arranged from an airplane for two days ahead and another air stunt that clicked was a series of sky signs (see photo) suspended in the sky by a number of box kites at the two leading local league football matches. Signs remain stationary, being anchored to the ground when in the desired position. Newspaper publicity included special feature stories.

Drawing Contests On 'Brigade' Click For Joe Dougherty

That was a raft full of campaign directed on "Light Brigade" at the Tower, in Upper Darby, Pa., by Manager Joe Dougherty and reported here by Warner division chief Skip Weshner, with some smartly executed drawing contests put on to attract the children to the date. One of the juvenile competitions was arranged with cooperation of the lower grade schools, subject for drawing being entirely optional with the pupil, providing of course it pertained directly to the picture. Enough prizes were promoted from the local merchants, says Joe, to provide first, second and third prizes for individual grades and classes participating. School art instructors assisted in the contest and acted as judges.

Winning drawings were displayed in the lobby on panel boards during the Saturday matinee when the prizes were presented from the stage. Parents and friends of the entrants were on hand to see the awards among which were expensive pen-and-pencil sets, cedar chests, candy, etc. Additional drawing contest was put on at the theatre for all children regardless of school affiliation with toys as prizes. Sufficient of these were promoted for all entrants and these too were presented from the stage.

Miniature Stills Interest Children

Featured also for the attention of children was the distribution of sets of 12 miniature action stills with credits and copy on reverse inviting juveniles to collect complete sets of the 12 for free admission to Saturday matinee. Stunt was announced on lobby poster and free distribution of the miniatures up to a certain time arranged by Dougherty. Over 200 sets were given out and cooperation of schools also obtained.

Outstanding outside stunt to tie-in with all the Saturday activity was a parade throughout the business section of the American Legion junior corps, theatre banners included. From time to time the juniors stopped at the theatre (see photo) for a bit of crowd-collecting. Also helping to excite interest was an offer of free admission to any patron arriving on horseback.

With all this, Joe did not neglect the adult slants and put on preview for top local school executives. This resulted in tie-ins with high school literary, history and art classes for special study. Essay contests were put on and announcements made in class of the date. Cooperation was received in addition from local women's clubs and libraries displayed placards carrying all credits.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Unusual "Adverse" Ad

For the neighborhood date on "Anthony Adverse" at the Modjeska, Garfield and Uptown, Milwaukee, Harold J. Pearlman promoted a six-column smash paid for by two merchants. Only outside copy included was a few lines of six-point at the bottom of the ad of merchants' names and addresses.

HIGH-POWER HOLIDAY CAMPAIGNS REPORTED BY VARIOUS MEMBERS

Round Tablers Create Artistic Lobby and Interior Displays; Effect Profitable Merchant Tieups to Stimulate Grosses

In an early December issue, there were set down details of many campaigns planned by Round Tablers in all parts of the country to offset the usual pre-holiday business and build patronage during the holiday season. Of equal interest are the outlines of what some of the theatremen accomplished in reaching their anticipated goals. Here follows what some of the boys did to decorate their houses, to tie in with merchants, to gather food, toys, etc., for the needy.

Down in Atlanta, E. E. "Whit" Whitaker, at the Fox, created a new display for his pit that was said to have topped anything this smart showman has done in that direction. "Whit" changed his entire setup for good results starting with a three-minute short from Warner Bros. that fitted right in with his plans. It featured the famous Paroda Kiddies singing carols, the organ-playing in the short being synchronized with the playing of the house organist.

When the youngsters sang "Hosanna," the house pit was brought up and magnascope opened with moving cloud effect. Angel cutout hovering over the pit (see photo at top, right) was connected with pulleys arranged so that when the pit rose the cutout was lowered and vice versa. Final film selection was "Jingle Bells" when the picture was faded back on the screen for the close-in as offstage voice wished the audience the compliments of the season.

For the pit scene, "Whit" reports the use of common straw for covering the shack, floor and manger. Proof of the straw fireproofing was invitation to the fire department to try and ignite the material. Protection was provided with a solution of alum, ammonia and borax which did the trick. Entire display was lighted in beautiful colors and the spotting of the manger in the accompanying photo made it appear much brighter than the surrounding subdued lighting.

booked for the special New Year's Eve midnight show. Champagne glass in center was six-feet high, entirely covered with flitter and made to revolve. Small glasses at the bottom moved back and forth. Background was of midnight blue, frames flittered and lettering in white. Spotlight with six different colors was trained on the display to enhance the beauty of the flash.

Up in Limerick, Me., Sam Kimball, who is now operating the Sokokis Theatre on his own and doing nicely, writes in to tell about how the folks were treated at his annual Christmas party. With the feature "Earthworm Tractor," Kimball screened four reels of 16 mm. he had made of local happenings, playing to over 125 kids and many of their parents out of a population of 1000. The folks also partook of generous portions of pop corn, grapes and apples on the house and through the genial Sam, Santa Claus distributed a pair of regulation skis to everyone in the house who was without them. Total came to 86 pairs and Kimball says it was great advertising for the house.

Biggs Cooperates with Daily

And way down in Alice, Texas, Manager R. H. Biggs' Rialto Theatre, hooked up his local paper for a giant Christmas party to take in children from all over the drawing area. The daily broke out with a page one story carrying seven-column banner on the get-together and followed this with a heap of followup, culminating two days ahead with a full page free ad in color. Parents were invited to bring the youngsters and do some of their holiday shopping at the same time.

In addition to the feature "Nevada," cartoon shorts were also shown and a program of games put on with prizes for the winning youngsters. Publicity in all ran for two weeks and Biggs reports the good-will now being translated into extra admissions from among folks in the drawing area. Paper also profited by garnering a lot of extra advertising and went after this by sending out letters to local stores telling all about the expected influx of outsiders for the big event.

That the newspapers in Paterson, N. J., were tied in with the first runs on holiday food shows and could not cooperate with him did not have the effect of licking Manager George Patterson's arrangement for the Yuletide. Patterson simply went ahead and hooked up with four posts of the American Legion to put on the show, members in uniform on hand to help the kids and Legion band supplying the music. Top feature of the tiein was that most of the local police are Legionnaires and the chief had all the squad cars making the rounds of schools distributing tickets, sent officers to the schools to speak of the coming show.

ADVANCE LOBBY. Quoting New York critics, Rodney Pantages and Lloyd Dearth, Pantages Theatre, Los Angeles, built this "Winterset" display with scene stills and stars' photos.

Patterson's party built up so strongly that the papers had to pick it up as news and ran pictures of the accumulated food contributions and the prominents of the cooperating posts.

Cooperating with his local paper on a Santa party with the old gent coming all the way from the North Pole via airplane which landed at the local airport, Manager J. S. Cagney, of Schine's Ben Ali, Lexington, Ky., tied in to all the publicity including a number of page one breaks. Santa also made an appearance at the theatre where a picture was screened supposedly taken at his North Pole home and also the landing in Lexington.

Other members who reported attention-getting holiday events included Managers Wm. Langdon, Lyric-Grand, Blue Island, Ill.; Chris Holmes, Royal Guelph, Ontario; Ed Vaughn, Sterling, and M. E. Lofgren, Park, both of Greeley, Colo; Ken Veach, Kentucky, Danville, Ky., Ted De Grazia, of the Lyric, Bisbee, Arizona; Herman H. Hable, Palace, Winchester, Va., and Buzz Briggs, State, Denver, Colo.

And in Bath, N. Y., Round Tabler Hal Lee, who opened the Babcock Theatre there on Christmas Day, 1924, put on a combination holiday and anniversary party to celebrate his twelfth year in that spot with the papers running his photo and over a half-column on his career and activities in the upstate community.

Installs Community Sing As Result of Accident

The way Tom Soriero tells it, it seems that one night some months back right after his giveaway, the sound equipment went bad and to fill in the lapse while the sound was restored, the house M. C. and musicians sang and played, invited the audience to participate in an amateur program, encouraged a lot of volunteer community singing. This went for over an hour.

Next day Tom got a lot of letters from patrons praising the spontaneous entertainment and asking that the Community Sing be included as part of the regular programs, which Soriero did and reports this feature a highly effective builder.

Dallas' "Texas Day"

Sponsored by local merchants in conjunction with a special sales day, "Texas Day" in Holdenville, Tex., was also utilized by David Dallas to sell "Texas Rangers" at the Grand. Special section put out by paper included photo of theatreman as co-producer of the event and special also carried publicity stories and ads on the date.

Rosen-Martin "Cain and Mabel" Tieup

Have Local Council to Thank For New Banner Location

It seems that the city fathers of Santa Barbara, Cal., decided to enforce local ordinance prohibiting hanging of flags or banners over the streets and sidewalks. So the team of Vic Rosen and Dave Martin at Warners Granada found it necessary to dig up some other means of publicising their studio previews instead of the banners over the street. They resorted to a giant 30-foot "preview tonight" banner hung from the sixth floor of the theatre building which proved much more effective than the old order. Boys say they have the local council to thank for bringing the matter to their attention.

Also reported are some other recent activities and above is shown tiein on "Cain and Mabel" with the new Chevrolet, opening of the picture coinciding with first showings of the new car. The words "game" and "able" were a play on the title and "true pictures of greatness" referred to the picture and auto. Cameramen on truck pepped up the bally.

Below is pictured large microphone sign used on "Underseas Kingdom" when the U. S. Navy came to town. For further atmosphere sailors were used with copy reading: "Calling All Navy Men. Before you lift anchor, be cure to see," etc. On "Big Noise," boy was sent through the business section carrying a giant firecracker, bannered, and further atmospheric ballys were arranged on such attractions as "Parole" and "Fang Claw" with costumed men on the streets to attract notice.

The boys took another slant to put over "Three Smart Girls" by planting some co-op ads in the local weekly and widely-read shopping news. Prominent advertiser was prevailed upon to use this medium on the tiein instead of the daily newspapers, weekly coming out on day of opening.

Rosen-Martin Stunt to Attract Navy Visitors

Bannan Holiday Drive More Than Doubles Grosses

With the cooperating merchants reporting over 40 per cent in increased business over the same period last year and the theatre more than doubling grosses for the month of December, Manager George Bannan, Edwards Theatre, Easthampton, N. Y., has completed his findings on the results of his Red Star community campaign and forwards the details of the very successful holiday business drive from Nov. 25 to Dec. 26.

The plan was organized to stimulate local shopping, to attract out-of-town trade and to encourage payment of back bills, 46 stores coming in with the theatre under the title of Red Star Merchants. Campaign was based on distribution of tickets or chances for each 50 cent purchase. Four weekly drawings were held in December, with main drawing for biggest prizes on Dec. 26th. In all, value of prizes was about $2,000, main attraction being a new 1936 sedan. Merchants were cautioned not to give tickets for less than 50 cent purchase and though their families were eligible for the prizes, efforts were made generally to discourage this participation as much as possible.

Each store was given as many double-numbered tickets as needed and arrangements made for weekly pickup by Bannan of tickets retained by the store. Signs carrying the red stars were distributed to identify cooperating stores and thousands of heralds given out as far as Montauk Point. All theatre posters were sniped with the drive copy and a trailer run at the theatre describing the prizes and urging patrons to shop at the "star" stores. Bannon also made short talks from the stage explaining details and building up interest.

City Is Decorated

In exchange for acceptable prize or fixed sum, merchant received mention in the drive ads which ran as much as half-pages, local newspaper cutting regular rates in half and papers in drawing area making special rates to cooperate. Publicity was generous and included many page one stories and banners, editorials, etc. All of the stores ran the "star" copy in their advertising, carried window cards and displays, placed red star on delivery trucks.

Other means were used to further publise the event and among these was bannering and driving the prize car through all towns on eastern Long Island. From the car heralds were distributed at school breaks, railroad stations where morning and evening trains were met. In Easthampton the main street was strung crosswise with red and green street lights. Buildings were decorated and carried the prize copy. Prizes were displayed in prominent windows and in lobby with the automobile conspicuously spotted.

For the final drawing, p.a. systems were hooked up out front and in main street store. Railroad flares were planted along the streets and high school band paraded to theatre giving concert in the pit. Officers of local bank handled all the winning tickets and the Mayor presided at the final drawing, presenting the winners with their prizes.

Columnist Sues (?) Grady for Libel On 'Sleeper' Date

What it takes to smoke up a good picture to extra feature attractiveness with the aid of a cooperative newspaper columnist is described by Manager Hal Grady, Palace, Lubbock, Tex., who details the operation on his date for "Theodora Runs Wild." It seems the columnist who signs himself "The Plainsman" had occasion in the past to put various pictures on the pan and with this in mind Grady steamed up quite an argument featured by a threatened suit for libel all of which aroused a lot of buzzing around town.

The Round Tabler started by running a one-column 15-inch type ad headed "Here's a sleeper, but first let us tell you what a sleeper is as applied to motion pictures." Copy went on to further explain and to label the attraction as the "Sleeper for 1936," followed by a lot of praise from the circuit's bookers. On the following day, in both morning and afternoon dailies, Hal ran the one-column ad reproduced on this page.

Next step was a lengthy reply from the "Plainsman" in his column on the same day in the afternoon sheet in which the columnist said in part: "If it's news when a man bites a dog, it certainly is news when a newspaperman sues somebody for libel. But that's just what the Plainsman is going to do as a result of an advertisement inserted in the Journal by Hal Grady. . . . The laws of Texas plainly state that whenever a man is held up to ridicule and scorn he has grounds for suit. And in saying in his advertisement that whenever the Plainsman pans a show the attendance is better than usual, Mr. Grady is doing just that. . . ."

The column went on to say that Grady was putting on the blast to build up interest in "Theodora," mentioning the picture and date, incidentally, and wound up by saying in all probability the feature would prove highly entertaining. Hal writes after reading the column a lot of folks went back to read the theatre ads that started the fuss and reports many believing the threatened libel suit as seriously intended. And best yet, when any discussion of the "suit" occurred the picture was of course mentioned.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

La Feria, Texas

Dear Herald:

We never saw a fat man who wasn't good-natured, and that's the way it is with R. B. Condron of the Bijou theatre at La Feria. We surmise that R. B. was brought up on Nebraska corned beef and cabbage.

R. B. knows how to operate a theatre as well as how to handle a piece of huckleberry pie. Anyhow, everything seems to be in huckelberry pie order around the Bijou. The Bijou is the gathering place for the clan in and around La Feria, and when they gather at the Bijou they always see something worthwhile.

Mr. King manages the Arcadia and other theatres at Harlingen. We always like to call on Mr. King, he is so genial and friendly. Maybe it is because he used to operate theatres in Muncie and South Bend, Indiana. Whenever they come from Indiana you don't need to watch 'em, unless they happened to have occupied a cell next to our own, which Mr. King didn't. Whenever we call on Mr. King he gives us the keys to the city and no questions asked. We are going to call on him again.

It has always been our misfortune to fail to find Mr. Brady of the Rivoli theatre at San Benito. He was gone this time, but we did meet him at the Capitol at Brownsville, where he and a friend called to see J. C. Fanning. They were on their way over to Matamoros, Mexico, "on business," but there is no use going to Matamoros now since we repealed the eighteenth amendment. While we didn't meet Mr. Brady at San Benito we did meet Gwen Zumwalt, his cashier. Gwen says her name used to be Zumwalt but now it is Brady. That shows that there is a strain of mighty good judgment running in both the Zumwalt and Brady families. Bulah Lippincott, the assistant cashier, still signs "Miss" in front of her name, a thing that the San Benito boys ought to take under consideration.

We just received a letter from Harland Rankin of the Plaza theatre at Tilbury, Ontario, Canada, and he says we should be up in that neck of Ontario, as the boys are really going to town. He says theatres are springing up everywhere and that it would do the boys good if we were to drop in on them. He also says for us to tell the boys in the States to save their old clothes for them, and he further says that they all read our Colyum with much interest, and then he winds up by saying, "Keep up the good work." What we'd like to know is where he gets that "good" stuff. He invites us up to see him, which was mighty doggone nice of him, and we asked a Manitoba man, who is occupying a cottage next to ours, where Tilbury was and he said he thought it was away up north in New Ontario. Just think of it, here we are picking oranges and grapefruit off the trees in our shirt-sleeves while up there he is probably shoveling snow out to the coalhouse with his mittens and overcoat on. Thanks for the invitation, brother Rankin, and maybe we will accept it when the hollyhocks come out and the fishing gets good in your lakes.

But to get back to grapefruit and oranges, and not mentioning the good shows we are seeing at Shine's theatre here in McAllen.

It may be of interest to you folks of the north and east, and Andy and Herb Anderson at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, to know that down here they are shipping train and truck loads of grapefruit and oranges out of the valley every day. Folks from the north are shipping an average of 100 bushel baskets of fruit by express to their friends every day, and this is only one of a dozen towns doing the same thing, and this is not counting the train loads of fruit going north over the Missouri Pacific every 24 hours, besides dozens of truck loads and ship loads from Port Brownsville and Port Isabell.

A friend of ours who has a seven acre orchard told us he had already sold 43 tons of oranges and grapefruit and thinks he has at least 32 tons left. Don't think this is an advertisement for the valley, for it isn't. There is a lot of expense to be figured in this, and if the grower of the fruit could get a reasonable return on his investment he would be satisfied, but he gets less than one cent a pound for it and the folks up north who are paying from 6 to 10 cents apiece will wonder who is getting the money. We know who is getting away with a lot of the fruit every meal, and we can prove it.

Yesterday we drove out and saw the home which was built and occupied by William Jennings Bryan. It is two miles north and a half mile east of Mission. That was before Mission had quit sucking the bottle and before he said, "Thou shalt not crucify man upon a cross of gold nor press a crown of thorns upon the brow of labor." This country needs some more William Jennings Bryans, but they are pretty doggone scarce.

Sometime we may tell you a little more about this country, for they have a wonderful history down here. Texas has lived under six different flags but she is living under a pretty good one right now, but it is bedtime and we will say Adios.

"ALL FOR YOU—"

NOW and then, or once in a blue moon, there are real moments in history, signal words said on signal occasions. But painful as the truth is they are usually afterthoughts, and fictional rememberings of the recorders, busy making their stories good. We now know, alas, that what Wolfe said on the Plains of Abraham was written long after, and we know, too, that General Pershing did not in fact stand at half mast before that tomb in France and murmur "Lafayette, we come."

But we do know and record here by the witness present, that the other night in Hollywood, after laudations by work and wire from most of the world of the screen, and special immediate accolade by that supreme accolader, Mr. Will Hays, a firm, grey, taut wisp of a man, Mr. Adolph Zukor, overwhelmed with honors at the dinner that brought to climax the affairs of his silver anniversary in the art and industry, stood up, facing his friends and more abashed than ever he was before bankers, brokers and the mighty, and said:

"I can accept this honor, and this scroll of the names of fine people about the world, because it is not for me, but because it is for all of the many who have worked and done their part in making this a great company, of the motion picture a great art and a great industry. It is then for you, for all of you that I can accept this—for you."

It was said with a humility proved genuine in a faltering, most unoratorical delivery. It was not the founder and boss of Paramount, not the stern master of a onetime box office monopoly, the dictator that laid the law of his will across an industry of yesteryear—it was just Adolph Zukor speaking out of a grateful heart.

No one wrote that speech for him. He said it, for himself.

A GOOD REPORTER

THE passing of James Oliver Spearing takes the foremost of the founders of modern motion picture criticism and a figure of wide influences in the earlier years of the development of that department of metropolitan journalism.

It was near the end of the world war and now nearly two decades in the past when Mr. Spearing, then chiefly engaged as assistant city editor of The New York Times, was rising to attention through his discussions of motion picture drama for that newspaper. His sane, even tempered judgments and constructively friendly attitude toward the medium won an important following, and with the weight of The Times contributed definitely to the status of the screen and its worth. Not so fortunately Mr. Spearing saw a blandishing beckoning from Hollywood, and went west for an uneventful and unencouraging sojourn of three years in the production community. He returned to New York and The Times to become its motor editor, the post he held at his death, and presently took a leave of absence on an expeditionary project, where once again he demonstrated that criticism and production are not closely kindred arts.

But it was upon Mr. Spearing's foundations that The New York Times established its motion picture department of excellence and competence, with a succession of officially designated motion picture editors beginning with Mr. Mordaunt Hall, the late Andre Sennwald and the current capable incumbent, Mr. Frank Nugent. The department from Mr. Spearing's beginnings has continued to be an example to the public press of the world. Jim Spearing was a good reporter—which is the best that can be said of any newspaper man.

SOME beginnings of the showmanship that was to make formative history for the motion picture had their roots in the great shows of the Crystal Palace, which gave London such a spectacular fire that it is now being made a subject of contemporary literature. It was in his triumphs which Chief Hale of the Kansas City fire department achieved in an international firemen's tournament there that he found his career in the show business leading up to his enterprise with the early pictures known as Hale's Tours. The Hale's tour device, as many oldsters remember, was a little theatre built in railway car fashion, on rockers to simulate motion, while pictures that had been made from the back platform of a moving train were projected on a screen at the end of the simulated car. The effect was to thrill the audience, at five cents a seat, with the sensation of going somewhere. It was a Hale's Tours show in Chicago which convinced Mr. Carl Laemmle, just emerging by ejection from the haberdashery business in Oshkosh, that he was going into the motion picture business. The late Mr. Marcus Loew, Mr. William A. Brady, and, if memory serves aright, Mr. Adolph Zukor, also, learned about movies from Hale's Tours.

THE sensational discovery of the Federal Communications Commission that the Bell Telephone Company has a substantial monopoly of network wire service to radio tends to confirm an impression that that concern has been importantly engaged in the business of transporting chatter for some time.

This Week

More Film Accounts

Distributors are now serving some 900 more accounts than one year ago, reporting this week a total of 16,258 houses in operation, compared with 15,378 last January. There are 350,000 more seats available today. Circuits have strengthened their position, whereas the independents now are operating 300 fewer houses.

The exhibition structure in detail is presented on pages 13 and 14.

Trade Practice

In a letter acknowledging receipt of the statement of RKO Radio's stand on the 10 point trade practice program, Edward Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, urged all distributors to take the initiative as soon as possible in establishing local conciliation boards.

The letter is quoted on page 62.

Air Raids

The extent to which radio has taken hold of Hollywood's motion picture talent supply for popular air entertainment is almost complete, with some 255 stars turning to the air in the past six months for some of the $3,000,000 which the radio broadcasters have at their disposal to buy film talent for their national air advertisers.

The conclusions and the proofs of a study of radio in Hollywood and the business of using film stars in broadcasts begin on page 33.

Seven and Six

As seven feature productions went into action on the studio stages in Hollywood, six were completed, and several of the new filmplays are considered to be big picture attractions. Twentieth Century-Fox started four of them, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer completed three.

Playwright Crop

The subsidization of playwrights by the legitimate theatre is urged upon stage producers by Actors Equity Association in New York, this week in a leading editorial in Equity, monthly publication of the organization. Actors' Equity has been engaged for some time with the League of New York Theatres and the Dramatists Guild in an attempt to discover what is wrong with the present day theatre and its lack of favor with the public.

Highlights of the editorial are found on page 60.

Patent Pool

A new royalty agreement and an extension of the international patents pool beyond 1945 will be discussed by officials of American companies and of Tobis Klangfilm next month. Western Electric, RCA and the American companies distributing in the Germanic countries are seeking an arrangement with Tobis under which the European royalties will be paid in the currency of the country in which they originate.

Details are on page 13.

Bill on Unfair Methods

Legislation giving the Federal Trade Commission in Washington authority to proceed against business concerns practicing unfair methods, even though no competitor may be injured, was introduced into the House of Representatives this week by Congressman Lea of California, chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Pointing out that the Commission's power to prevent dishonest methods in commerce unless they affect competitors is doubtful under the present law, Mr. Lea would give it the authority to move against such practices on its own initiative, even though the practices assailed might be used by an entire industry.

Allied Meets

Directors of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors were scheduled to hold their annual meeting and election of officers on Thursday in Baltimore. Arrangements were made for the visiting directors to attend the inaugural parade in Washington on Wednesday.

Names of the directors attending the meeting are on page 18.

Boon to Exhibitors

Motion picture exhibitors in Chicago, as well as distributors, see a hopeful sign in acquisition of a 30-year lease on the Roosevelt theatre in the Loop by Balaban and Katz. Possible release of 52 more pictures a year would do a bit toward solving a situation which has delayed the first showing of many pictures as long as 90 days.

Other developments in the Chicago area are recorded on page 76.

Significance

Western Electrical and Electrical Research Products this week won the dismissal of the anti-trust suits brought against them by General Talking Pictures and Duovac Radio.

Explanation of the charges, which are the basis of 22 other suits brought against Erpi, appears on page 18.

British Production Rise

There were 24 more features registered by British producers in 1936 than in the previous twelve months, the annual report of the British Board of Trade shows. The percentage of British features to the total registered was 29.5, and for features and short subjects combined was 27.9 per cent.

Two in One

Hollywood comment on "Top of the Town," Universal production nearing completion, is to the effect that the picture would be a picture without the music and the music would be entertainment without a supporting story, all of which pieces together in the production center as a promise of box office returns expressed in box car numerals.

A pictorial preview of the film by Gus McCarthy, in Hollywood, is published on pages 16 and 17.

Another Theatre Record

Another four-year record has been broken. For the second week of the new year grosses soared to $2,262,950 in 29 key cities with 175 first run theatres reporting. This figure was $172,806 above the 2,090,144 record established for Labor Day week when the opening of the new season signalized a sensational jump from depression levels.

The record was the second consecutive week over the $2,000,000 mark. For the previous week, ending January 2-3, the total was 2,037,040. Christmas week the total fell to $1,316,371.

Reorganization

The hearing on the RKO reorganization plan as well as a hearing on a motion for permission to intervene, filed by Isidor J. Kresel on behalf of his clients, the stockholders of Orpheum Theatres, Inc., has been adjourned to February 18th in Federal court in New York.

Further details are reported on page 56.

Covering the Inaugural

Newsreel executives this week were strong in their expression of the "unprecedented cooperation" afforded them by Government officials in Washington for the filming of the inauguration of President Roosevelt into his second term of office. Approximately 30 crews and 100 men, including photographers, sound men, assistants and executives assembled in Washington early in the week and on Tuesday held a "dress rehearsal" of the proceedings as they set up their equipment to film the entire inaugural ceremony.

See page 15.

Securities

A statement covering more than $45,000,000 in securities, for registration on the New York Stock Exchange, has been filed by Paramount Pictures with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington. Similar statements, in less detail, have been filed by Columbia Pictures Corporation and by Condor Pictures.

Details of the reports are on page 60.

Radio and Congress

That radio is to be the object of Congressional attention this year was indicated this week. A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives providing for wide investigation of what is claimed to be a monopoly of broadcasting, and Senator Burton K. Wheeler requested the Federal Communications Commission to supply him with information concerning radio station ownership.

Legislative and other news of the radio field is on page 48.

Mr. Fox and the Court

Hiram Steelman, bankruptcy trustee for William Fox, won a preliminary victory in the United States supreme court when an order was issued restraining further action to prevent Mr. Steelman from suing All-Continent Corporation pending review of the dispute.

Details are on page 66.

Favor Quota Plan

The Cinematograph Exhibitors Association in Great Britain, officially reporting to the Board of Trade on the so-called Moyne report, indorsed the proposed preference to exhibitors in the Quota over distributors but sees the 50 per cent top as impracticable.

The exhibitors' views on this and other elements of the Moyne report are outlined on page 68.

More Salary Lists

The United States Government in Washington this week continued to make public the salaries paid members of the motion picture industry, during 1935, but the figures recently revealed were all in the lower brackets, ranging from approximately $15,000 to $50,000.

The list of salaries revealed by the Government is found in the story on page 64.

Sales Campaigns

Most of the large companies are conducting or are planning to inaugurate special sales drives and campaigns to bring their totals for the 1936-37 season to new high marks.

Activities in the selling field are told, company by company, on page 48.

Boleslawski Dead

Funeral services for Richard Boleslawski, 47 year old director, were held on Tuesday in Culver City. Born in Poland and educated in Russia, Mr. Boleslawski had achieved an unusual career in motion pictures.

His obituary is on page 60.

Exhibitor Voice

Paramount production executives heard the voice of the exhibitor last week, and then did something about it. Theatre partners of the company, invited to take part in a production conference at the studio, urged that the number of "B" pictures be reduced. The company cut the "B" schedule from 24 to 18 and promised to improve story and cast values of the 18, with a larger budget for them. The exhibitors said the public wanted more music in pictures. The producers said the company would have five musicals ready for release in late winter. The exhibitors declared the public wanted new faces. The company designated the showmen as talent scouts. The meetings are to be made annual events.

The producers' recognition of the value of exhibitor cooperation is traced on page 46.

Class Audiences

When Rene Huisman of the Best Film Company first showed "Cloistered" at art theatres in New York and Boston last May, trade opinion, bolstered by many reviews, was that the picture as a work of art was movingly beautiful but in its nature could appeal to only a limited audience. By showing the production in church auditoriums and leased theatres the distributor convinced bookers, by his unusual grosses, that there was an audience for the film. Latest of the large circuits to buy the picture is RKO, for 20 houses in the metropolitan area.

Mr. Huisman's adventures with "Cloistered" are described on page 46.

GB Distribution

A meeting between Sidney R. Kent and Arthur Lee this week resulted in an agreement that "River of Unrest," a British International picture acquired for American release by Gaumont British, will be distributed through Twentieth Century-Fox exchanges in spite of Mr. Kent's recent announcement that the American company's exchanges would not handle any pictures for GB other than those made by that company.

The story of the agreement and other news of GB is on page 62.

Fan Club Inquiry

The attention of the Post Office Department and the Department of Justice in Washington this week was reported to have been focused on "racketeering" members of motion picture fan clubs who are demanding free trips to Hollywood from stars under threats of "boycott" if refused. The departments both refused to comment on the reports, but it is reported that information concerning the activities of the racketeers has been supplied them by stars and that action will be forthcoming soon.

For details, see story on page 28.

900 MORE FILM ACCOUNTS ON BOOKS THAN YEAR AGO

Film Boards of Trade Report 16,258 Theatres Open, Seating 10,440,632; Five Hundred New Houses

Distributors in the United States today are serving 900 more accounts with film than one year ago, reporting 16,258 film accounts in actual operation, seating 10,440,632, and comparing with previous years as follows:

JANUARY 1	NUMBER OF THEATRES OPEN	TOTAL CAPACITIES
1937	16,258	10,440,632
1936	15,378	10,098,920
1935	14,552	9,719,537
1934	13,736	*........
1933	13,416	*........
1932	14,750	*........

* Seating capacity not recorded.

Thus does exhibition—the real barometer of motion picture business—reflect the advancement made since the low mark of 1933.

Not all of these theatres which were established as "new accounts" on the distributors' books in 1936 constituted reopenings of existing properties; new theatre construction in the year contributed an estimated 500 new houses. There has been a pronounced tendency in the last two years to remove antiquated structures, also those with small seating capacities and millions in addition have been spent for rehabilitation of old buildings.

Comparative Figures

The theatre structure of this country today compares as follows:

JANUARY 1	PROPERTIES STANDING	THEATRES OPERATING
1937	18,818	16,258
1936	18,508	15,378
1935	18,263	14,552
1934	18,371	13,736
1933	19,311	13,416
1932	20,100	14,750

The foregoing shows the trend toward elimination of theatre buildings standing in idleness, from the 6,000 structures standing unused in 1932 to only 2,560 today. Practically 3,500 houses which were idle in 1932 have either been razed and abandoned because of local non-supporting economic conditions, or where conditions warranted they have been replaced by new and modern structures available for business operation. At least 900 of the 2,500 buildings now idle are without sound reproducing equipment, and the silent film supply virtually has been cut off.

Second Year of Gain

The year 1936 was only the second in at least five when distributors reported in excess of 15,000 active accounts on their books, January 1, 1936, showing 15,378 accounts, and January 1, 1937, 16,258 accounts.

A complete table, showing the number of theatre accounts served by each distribution key city, with comparisons with previous years, appears on the following page.

In the last six years, the average individual seating capacity—based on the number of theatre structures standing, both open and closed—compared as follows:

JANUARY 1	AVERAGE NUMBER OF SEATS PER THEATRE
1937	610
1936	610
1935	610
1934	600
1933	599
1932	535

The average seating capacity for the country's theatres, then, has been increased some 75 seats a theatre, on the average, in six years.

There were 321,700 more seats available on Jan. 1, 1937, in operating theatres, than on the same date last year, but the total capacities in all theatres, both open and closed, were only 162,858 more than one year ago, capacities for all houses, operating and not, comparing as follows:

JANUARY 1	PROPERTIES STANDING (Open and Closed)	TOTAL CAPACITIES
1937	18,818	11,470,899
1936	18,508	11,308,041
1935	18,263	11,132,595
1934	18,371	11,028,950
1933	19,311	11,161,193
1932	20,100	10,767,411

These conclusions were drawn this week by the Film Boards of Trade of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and were taken from the books of all of the large distributors, as provided by customer records on film served as appearing on the records of the distributors' exchanges in the field.

Circuits Show Gain

Affiliated circuits, unaffiliated circuits both advanced their positions in 1936, whereas the independent operators lost ground, as witness the following comparisons:

UNAFFILIATED CIRCUITS— JANUARY 1	TOTAL THEATRES	CAPACITIES
1937	2,397	2,940,070
1936	2,192	2,908,226
1935	2,073	2,718,701
1934	1,954	2,586,643
1933	2,266	2,937,644

UNAFFILIATED CIRCUITS JANUARY 1	TOTAL THEATRES	SEATING CAPACITIES
1937	3,910	3,005,039
1936	3,464	2,766,806
1935	3,070	2,539,416
1934	2,846	2,493,382
1933	3,189	2,561,726

2,000 Houses Idle in 1932 Have Been Either Rebuilt or Dismantled; 610 Seats Is Average Capacity

The independent theatres continued the decline begun in 1934. Comparative totals since 1933 are:

INDEPENDENT THEATRES— JANUARY 1	TOTAL THEATRES	SEATING CAPACITIES
1937	12,511	5,525,790
1936	12,852	5,633,009
1935	13,120	5,874,478
1934	13,571	5,948,925
1933	13,796	5,585,830

Both the affiliated and so called "unaffiliated" circuits stand today in a stronger position than five years ago, whereas the independents as a whole have 1,200 fewer theatres than in 1933.

The silent theatre has disappeared to the point where today there are only 36 operating—probably constituting civic or lodge halls in the remotest sections, yet carried on the distributors' books as "regular customers." The story of the slow but certain death of the silent "nickelodeon" is told in the following compilation:

	TOTAL THEATRES STANDING		CLOSED THEATRES
Jan. 1	Sound	Silent	Sound	Silent
1937..	17,915	903	1,693	867
1936..	16,989	1,519	1,638	1,492
1935..	16,325	1,938	1,824	1,887
1934..	15,652	2,719	1,979	2,656
1933..	15,231	4,080	2,170	3,725
1932..	14,805	5,295	1,582	3,757

Not one of the 36 silent theatres, so far as is known, is operating on full-time.

Patent Pool Talks Set for February

Negotiation of a new royalty agreement and discussions of an extension beyond 1945 of the international patents pool of American companies and Tobis Klangfilm will be undertaken in New York next month with the arrival from Europe of Tobis officials. Western Electric, RCA and American companies distributing in the Germanic countries will participate in the conferences.

The distributors have given a statement on royalties due Tobis for 1936 to Milton Diamond, American representative of the company, which offers $75,000 in settlement for the year ended December 30th. The offer provides for payment of the royalties in dollars for every country except Germany, the sums due from German distribution to be paid in marks.

American distributors are seeking an arrangement with Tobis under which the European royalties may be paid in the currency of the country in which they originate, rather than in dollars.

Nine Theatres Are Sued for Lottery

Nine motion picture theatres are included in a list of 20 defendants named in legal action instituted Tuesday in New Jersey's Union, Essex and Hudson counties under the state informers' act to determine the legality of chance games. Also listed among the defendants were six churches, several fraternal lodges and a political group.

The suits were filed by Roy H. Decker, of Linden, N. J., through his attorney Max J. Berlin, also of Linden, with each suit seeking $2,000 under the informers' act of 1877 as amended last year to fix the informers' share in any verdict as one per cent, the balance going to the state.

Explaining the maximum his client could recover in each case would be $20, Berlin told the press Mr. Decker did not seek to benefit financially from the action, but merely "to focus attention on the fact that bingo, bank nights and the like are tolerated while authorities clamp down on the numbers game and lotteries."

"We felt," Mr. Berlin declared, "that something drastic had to be done."

Trial Date Is Set For Local 306 Agent

The trial of Joseph Kelban, Brooklyn business agent of Local 306, Motion Picture Operators' Union, arrested last week on the complaint of Paul Weintraub, manager of the Folly theatre in Brooklyn, has been set for January 26 in the Brooklyn special sessions court. Mr. Weintraub caused the arrest of Mr. Kelban when the agent allegedly ordered the lights in the theatre turned out when the management of the house, it is claimed, refused to pay $572 in back wages said to be due the projectionists.

Kent Gathering Clearance Data

Sidney R. Kent is gathering documents and other data essential to aid him in the determination of film rental and clearance between Warner Brothers and Fanchon and Marco under the court stipulation which ended the St. Louis litigation and which named him the arbitrator. Mr. Kent met this week with Gradwell Sears and I. Levinson representing Warner Brothers and Harry Arthur and Irving Lesser for F. and M.

New Radio Contract For RCA Recording

RKO Radio Pictures, first large producing company to use RCA sound recording for all its pictures, has renewed its recording license agreement for an additional term of 10 years, according to Edwin M. Hartley, RCA Photophone head.

Under the terms of the new agreement, Radio becomes eligible to use a number of new technical developments recently perfected, such as the ultra-violet light and the push-pull double sound track recording system.

Distribution charges will be based on actual running time in the theatre, rather than on an arbitrary charge per reel. Original foreign language versions made in America will cost only 50 per cent of the domestic recording fee and no additional charges are made for recording trailers or for dubbing in this country, under the terms of the contract.

Pathe News, Inc., has signed a recording license agreement with RCA Photophone which calls for the replacement of the sound equipment in its entire fleet of newsreel cars with improved apparatus developed in the RCA laboratories in collaboration with Pathe engineers.

100 NEWSREEL CAMERMEN COVER INAUGURAL FOR NATION'S SCREENS

Thirty Crews Follow Minutely Charted Instructions; Steel Platform 25 Feet High in Center of Ceremonial Field

President 'Toes the Mark' Made with Chalk on Platform to Insure Focus of Cameras During Giving of Address

The newsreels have seen to it that there is no reason why anyone who was not able to travel to Washington Wednesday should miss a single important detail in the inauguration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt into his second term of office.

Mindful that even the thousands who made the pilgrimmage to the capital might find their own eye-view of the ceremonies obstructed, the White House and Capitol Hill accorded motion picture newsreel men what some of the veterans reported as "unprecedented cooperation."

The line of march, studded with platforms made available to all five newsreels so they could train their lenses on every foot of the way, testified conspicuously to the fact that if screen reports of the inauguration were not up to the mark, the Government could not be blamed.

In Capitol Plaza, for the first time, the Government permitted newsreels to erect a steel-pillared platform costing over $2,000 and rearing fully 25 feet above the seated crowds, in the very center of the ceremonial field and on a direct line with the inaugural stand.

On the eve of Inauguration Day, the President climaxed all of the Government support manifested in such matters as construction of platforms, and the granting of permits and licenses. He agreed, literally, to "toe the line" for newsreels while delivering his address, according to company executives.

It was no mythical line, no figure of speech, but a broad mark on the floor of the inaugural stand made with plain white chalk. Its purpose, of course, was to remind the President that while he remained inside this boundary the boys out front on the tower were keeping him in perfect focus.

30 Camera Crews

By Tuesday night a total of 30 camera crews, assigned by all the newsreels—Fox Movietone News, News of the Day, Paramount News, Pathe, and Universal—was reported at the Capital, and with the many assistants that figure in photographing, recording and dispatching such a story, conservative estimates placed at more than 100 the number of screen news men under this assignment in Washington.

For practically all the newsreels, the day before the inauguration was a hectic one. A. J. Richard, Paramount editor-in-chief, was up at six o'clock that morning mustering his assistants, Robert Denton, head of the Washington bureau, Merrill Johnson and Harry Cuthbertson of the home office, as well as members of 13 camera crews.

An hour later, in a pouring rain, these crews had deployed to their platforms and stations along the line of march for a dress rehearsal of a complete, individual coverage campaign which had been worked out in New York.

Of the stands provided by the Government for the newsreel coverage of the Inaugural ceremonies, this vantage point, on one of the far corners of Capitol Plaza, had the Dome as a background. A. J. Richard, editor-in-chief of Paramount News, here is shown giving some pointers on long shots to Harry DeSienna, cameraman, and Lou Cass, soundman.

Cruising about the city, the editors and their lieutenants reviewed each nest of camera and sound gunners. The inspection included an examination of lenses and their focus. In order to command a continuous and undisturbed view of the entire proceedings, Paramount and several other reels had skeletonized their New York staffs and called in crews from Maryland and Virginia, and Universal even had men down from Chicago.

Several of the crews from three of the reels were given roving assignments. Paramount commissioned Arthur Menken, recently returned from Spain where he was wounded filming civil war scenes, was sent aloft in a blimp for air views of the ceremonies, and other details were ordered to sound trucks to keep within camera radius of the President during the parade.

Each of the companies had one, and in most cases, two crews set up in front of the inauguration stand as well as a like number on a similar platform in the rear. Most of the reels used two crews to film high shots of the inauguration from space allotted them atop the Congressional Library and from the roof of the adjacent House Office Building. Each, also, had one crew at the White House to photograph the President as he left for the ceremonies and again upon his return, and cameras also were set up opposite the Court of Honor where President Roosevelt reviewed the parade. The inauguration procession was photographed by every reel as it made its way up Pennsylvania Avenue, and some made high shots of it as well.

Past experiences, as in the case of Mr. Richard of Paramount who covered his first assignment of this kind in 1917, had taught newsreelmen that they cannot cope with crowds and be expected to race on foot with their equipment from one section to another. Nearly 40,000 feet of negative film were distributed by each newsreel among its various crews, with provisions made for replenishment by special messengers. With 2,500 feet to a magazine, this would bring the footage initially allotted by all newsreels to their men to more than 200,000 feet.

Motorcycle Courses Charted

An elaborate messenger service to the airport also was instituted by some of the reels, motorcyclists picking up the film, collected by other men from the camera nests every hour, and rushing it by specially chartered routes to the airport. At Newark, similar plans called for other motorcyclists to speed the negatives to laboratories.

However, early Wednesday morning plans had to be changed and most of the negatives were rushed to New York by train. The rain that had been falling in Washington and New York all this week changed to snow and forced the grounding of planes, necessitating the late change.

Loew's To Extend Checking

Loew's will extend its own checking system to all its branches, it was reported this week. Colonel E. A. Schiller, who is supervising the introduction of the system in cooperation with Alan Cummings, will leave New York for the west this month to inaugurate the plan.

Infringement Suit Dismissed

The United States district court in Cincinnati has dismissed a suit brought by Margaret Tuttle, author of "Kingdoms on the Earth" against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. She charged "The Unguarded Hour" infringed her coypright.

Ohio Censors Make 42 Cuts

The Ohio board of censors reviewed 756 reels in December from which 42 eliminations were ordered. For the year 1936 a total of 6,807 reels were reviewed and 342 eliminations ordered.

MUSIC ADORNS STORY OF

TO say that "Top of the Town" is the talk of the town here in Hollywood may not be wholly fair to a populace notorious for talking first, last and always of itself and its works, but it's as near to being that as a picture yet untested by box office often becomes. Here, say the knowing ones, the new Universal, as it is called, has a production as new, generically, as the organization sponsoring it, a musical picture that would be a picture without the music and a musical entertainment that would be an entertainment without the story. It follows, according to Hollywood logic, that "Top of the Town" is a kind of double value film practically incapable of missing fire.

The story referred to in these strong terms is by Robert Benchley, whose special brand of humor seems made to order for film purposes, and Lou Brock, who produced "Flying Down to Rio" in like manner and similar dimension, and when these pens had done with the script it went to Brown Holmes and Charles Grayson. Into the screen play which they wrought has been woven a musical score by Jimmy McHugh and Harold Adamson for which is claimed a record of seven song hits, a new high for song numbers taken from a single production by a music publishing company (Robbins) for commercial radio use and general sale. It is argued that this practically guarantees the picture a running start and that intrinsic story value is promise of sustained box office effectiveness throughout subsequent playing time.

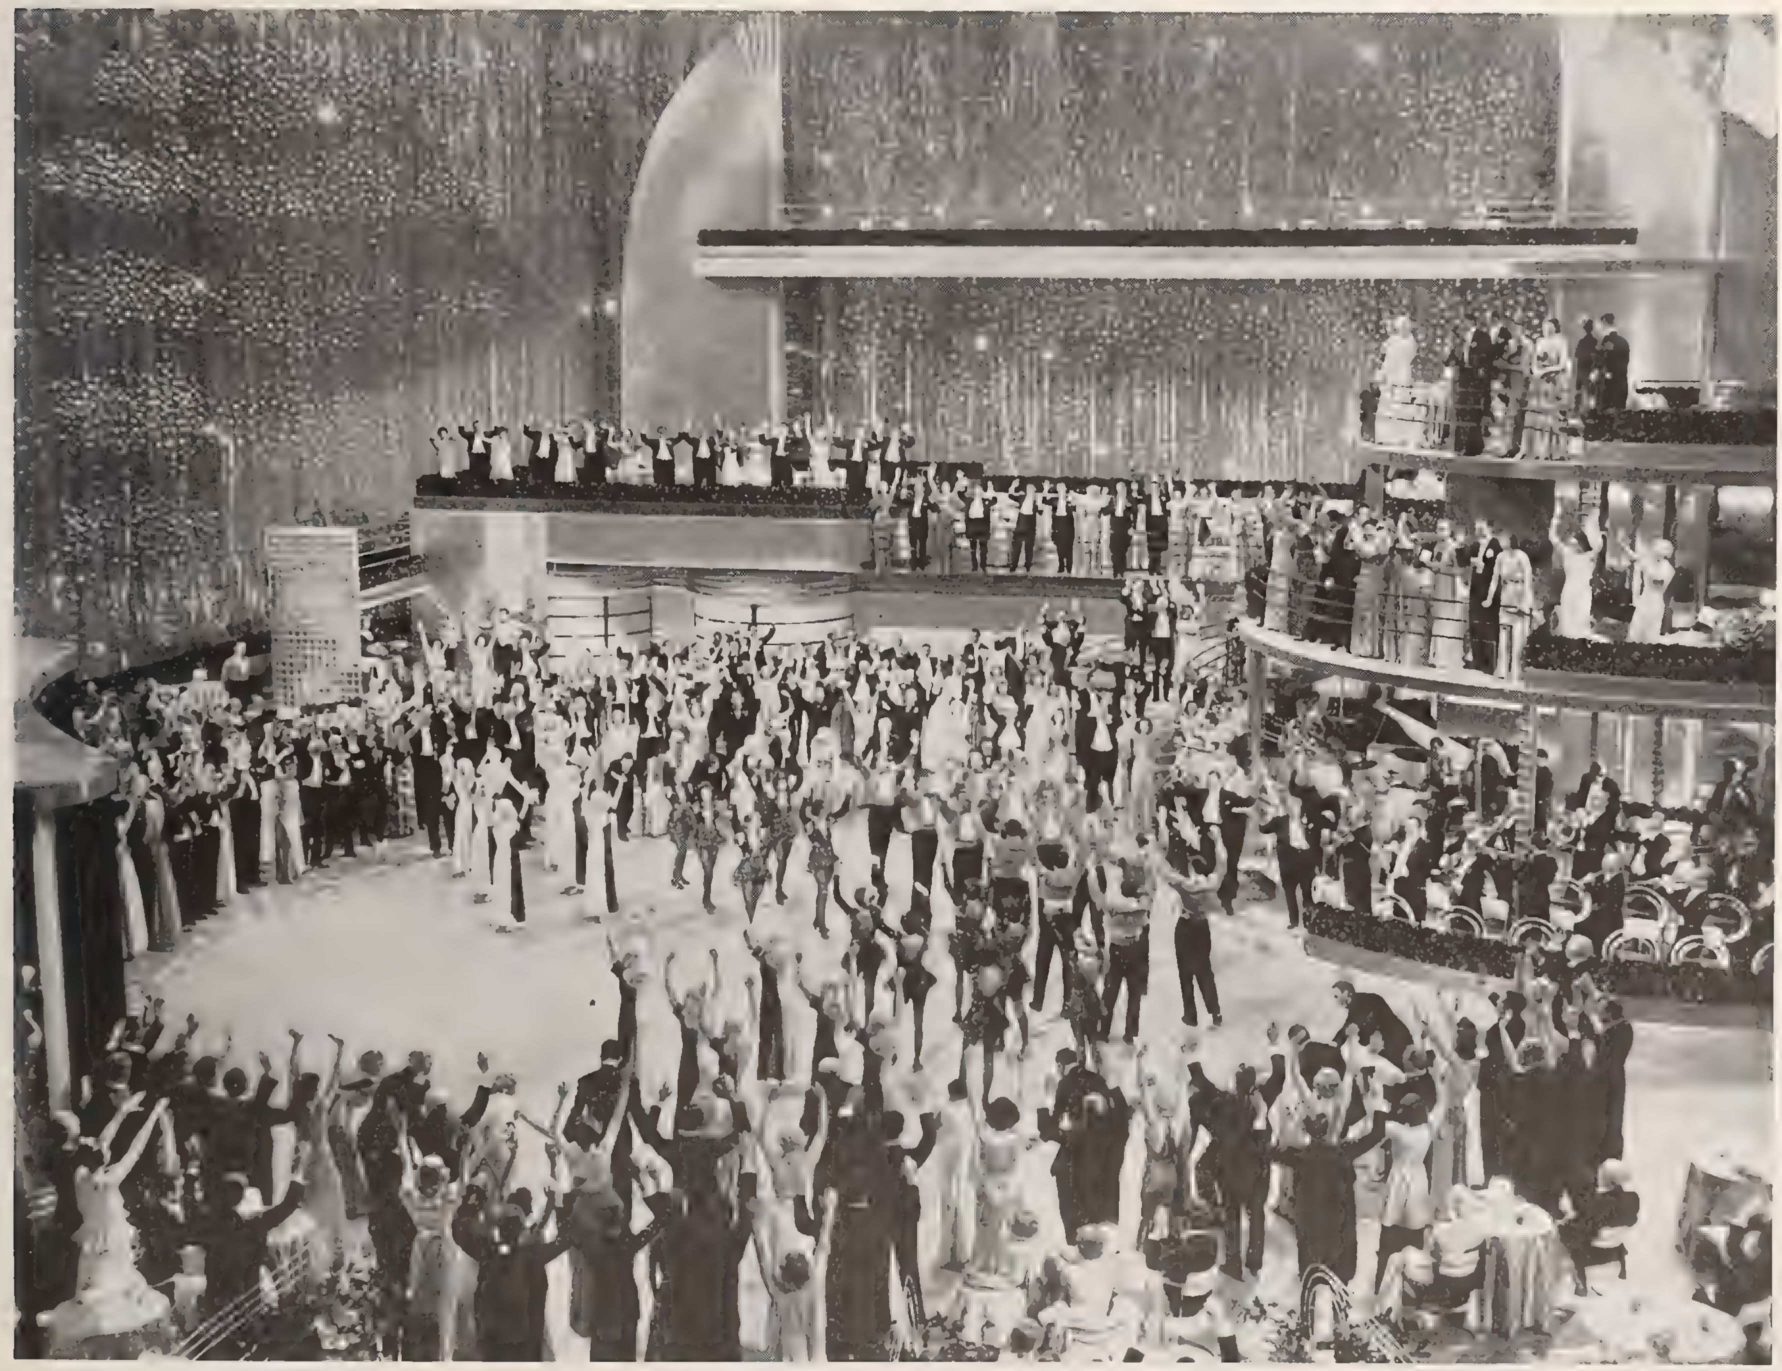
"TOP OF THE TOWN"

A Herald Preview in Advance Stills by Gus McCarthy

Harkrider, designer of "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Swing Time," carried out script requirements for presentation of a night club, largest and most lavish in the world and located atop the world's highest building, concerning the operations of which the heroine of the story, heiress to $50,000,000, is vitally interested. Dedicated to the uplifting of night club entertainment, as shown in the smaller reproductions, she is forced to accept the professional standards represented in the larger pictures shown—but that's the story. The facts are that the set of the "Moonbeam Room" is 70 feet high, covers 40,500 square feet, is constructed of steel, concrete and glass brick and cost something like $100,000. It is dressed with 36,000 yards of cellophane, lighted by 200 kleig lights and accommodated 1,000 persons for the final sequence.

Against this and other sets and under direction of Ralph Murphy, Doris Nolan and George Murphy play the romantic leads, art-y heiress and orchestra leader, supported by Hugh Herbert, Gregory Ratoff, Gertrude Niesen, Ella Logan, Henry Armetta, Mischa Auer, Claude Gillingwater, Ray Mayer, Ernest Cossart, Samuel S. Hinds and a long roster of similarly qualified talents.

Hollywood is of the opinion that all this spells box office in box car numbers. Only the box office, of course, can say whether it does or not. Meanwhile, studio sages are computing the production cost at a round million dollars and pointing out that Charles R. Rogers, who doesn't gamble in those figures for fun, is down in the credit sheet as executive producer. Further deponent saith not.



ERPI WINS DUOVAC ANTI-TRUST SUIT

Group of 22 "Treble Damage" Suits Brought on Same Charges, Says Western Electric

The anti-trust suits brought by General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation against American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, were dismissed this week as against A. T. & T. and Western Electric by Federal Judge Nields, in the United States district court at Wilmington, Delaware. At the same time, Judge Nields denied the injunctions which the plaintiffs attempted to obtain against Electrical Research.

The claims of the plaintiffs in these two suits were, basically, that from the beginning of the effort to introduce and establish commercial talking pictures, Western Electric and Electrical Research, through alleged restrictive contracts with motion picture producers and exhibitors and owners of music copyrights, and in other ways, attempted to monopolize the manufacture and sale of the sound equipment required for talking motion pictures, including the recording apparatus for studios and the reproducing apparatus for theatres. These claims of the plaintiffs were rejected by the court.

Judge Nields, in his opinion, dwelt upon the difficulties attending the early attempts to introduce commercial talking pictures, pointing to the necessity of the precautions which Western Electric and Erpi took to insure recordings and performances of sound pictures of a quality which would merit public esteem and acceptance. The court pointed out that in this effort to establish commercial talking pictures, Western Electric and Electrical Research succeeded where many others had attempted and failed.

Both Clauses Dropped

Particular criticism was directed by the plaintiffs in these suits toward two provisions in the early contracts between Electrical Research and motion picture producers and theatre owners. One of these provisions was the so called "equality clause," by which Erpi's producer licensees agreed to release their sound pictures only to the theatre equipments which would perform with volume and quality equal to that produced on Erpi equipment. The second was a clause in the early leases of theatre equipments by which the exhibitors agreed to obtain solely from Erpi renewal and replacement parts required for theatre equipments. These clauses, Judge Nields held, were reasonable and proper during the research and promotional periods of the art. He held that when the art had reached full commercial development, the clauses were to be regarded as unlawful. But he pointed out that under the policy pursued by Erpi, the equality clause had not in fact operated to prevent theatre owners having other than Erpi equipment from freely obtaining recordings by producers who were Erpi licensees, and he found that the so called renewal and replacement parts clauses had been abandoned by Erpi long prior to the trial.

Specifically the renewal and replacement clauses were eliminated from Erpi's theatre agreements in November, 1933, and the equality clause, which was not enforced, was dropped from its new license agreements made with Paramount effective March, 4, 1933, and with Warner Brothers effective January, 1934, at which time the same contracts were offered to Erpi's other producer licensees. For these reasons, the injunction sought by the plaintiffs against the alleged operation of these clauses was denied.

"Judge Nields' decision is held to be one of great significance to the industry and the case is one which has attracted wide spread attention," according to Western Electric.

In a trial which consumed approximately eight weeks, exhaustive inquiry was made with respect to practically every step in the development of the sound picture business, and every related contract entered into by the Western Electric Company and Electrical Research Products was subject to scrutiny. The record contains more than 5,000 pages and approximately six hundred exhibits.

Judge Nields' opinion, which comprised 34 pages of typewritten manuscript, is an analysis of the history of the introduction of sound into motion pictures as a result of research in Bell Telephone Laboratories on through the period of early promotion. He pointed out the difficulties which had to be overcome before the industry recognized the place of sound as a factor in motion picture entertainment. He examined the practices of Electrical Research and declared that every step taken was at that time proper, reasonable and necessary. He declared that without the manufacturer's insistence upon the rigid maintenance of the intergrity of the equipment, the results might have been fatal to the ultimate development of the art, and that when, on the other hand, standards of quality had thus been established and the industry recognized their importance, Erpi relaxed the restrictions which it had earlier incorporated in its agreements, and modified its contractees accordingly.

Same Charges in 22 Suits

"Judge Nields' decision in these cases is of additional interest because it was upon these same charges that a group of 22 socalled treble damage suits against the three Bell System companies were brought between July, 1933 and September, 1935, in which alleged damages aggregating $175,000,000 were claimed," according to Western Electric. "The contractual relationships and business policies of Electrical Research Products, Inc., and Western Electric Company which were attacked in the Wilmington cases are the same against which similar charges are made in these pending damage suits; and they are the same relationships and practices which, in large part, formed the subject of the recent Federal Communications Commission hearings in New York, in the course of which present and former officials of Electrical Research Products, Inc., were questioned," the company said.

In this connection, another development came on Monday, when Federal Judge John C. Knox granted the motion of attorneys for American Telephone & Telegraph Company, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., for comprehensive and detailed bills of particulars in five of these 22 treble damage suits. The cases were those of Stillwell Theatres, of Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres Corporation, the William Fox Isis Investment Company, Harrison Amusement Corporation, and the Winchester Amusement Company, Inc., whose claims aggregated about $3,000,000. At the time of the application for these bills of particulars, the motions were vigorously opposed by counsel for the plaintiffs in the five actions.

Allied Directors In Baltimore for Meeting of Board

The annual meeting and election of officers of the board of directors of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors was scheduled to open in the Emerson Hotel, Baltimore, on Thursday, January 22nd, continuing through Friday. A banquet was scheduled for Thursday night at which Mayor Jackson of Baltimore and other city and state officials were to be guests. "COLLEGE HOLIDAY"

Smashes to new highs as Buck Benny rides again for Paramount

One of the New York critics said there was no plot to "College Holiday." The lad was wrong. The plot was to make one of the big grossers of the year . . . and the plot worked. The first of the Jubilee pictures is knocking 'em down from coast to coast. Everybody thought "Big Broadcast" was terrific. "College Holiday" is running neck and neck with that box-office champion.

"CHAMPAGNE WALTZ"

Jubilee Special proves sock box-office from coast to coast

Special showings of "Champagne Waltz" have clicked this big Jubilee musical into the money. And everyone tells us we've built another terrific grosser as our third in the Jubilee series. "Champagne Waltz," in addition to its own value as a top class musical, is backed by one of those Paramount exploitation jobs which have the industry talking . . . national tie-ups by the dozen. Audiences that have seen the special Paramount Jubilee trailer have shown what they will do when this picture is screened...

Richard Wallace's direction is superb.

"STAGE" MAGAZINE rates Paramount music staff as tops in the business

SOURCE-SPRING for New — and Good Music

The motion picture is becoming an important source of original and significant musical composition

Now modern music, exemplified by the work of young men like George Antheil and Werner Janssen, has failed until now to evoke any strong emotional response in me and in many other people, when played in concert form. I go, however, to hear (and see) The Plainsman or The General Died at Dawn, and I find myself in a fine state of excitement brought on almost entirely by the music. Of course, I am a queer old crab and I neither see pictures nor hear music with the approach that somebody else may have. I am a sour skeptic both about the cinema and about modern music. When the two join hands, however, they do not find me doubly sour and skeptical, as they might. If both are (as in the two jobs just mentioned) intrinsically good, they find me waving my hat.

In a strange way this turn of affairs has been slipped over on the American public almost by sleight-of hand while the studio press departments have been screaming the glamor of the heroines, the sex appeal of the heroes, and the general stupendousness of movie production. A new art form has been developed, a new and incredibly powerful medium for creative music crystallized, and a new field opened for the expression of genius, and the whole works has been shoved under the back door like an overdue laundry bill been done gingerly and shamefacedly, as if the producers had timidly admitted that they had to get accessory atmosphere in somehow and would try to sweeten up the draught with a little music. Nothing could have been healthier for the pictures and for the music itself. If the press departments had been given the go-ahead to publicize every note of music composed for every recent worthwhile picture, my guess is that the music would have no more stature than an ex bathing beauty all whooped-up as the greatest emotional actress since Rachel

But some time during the early part of January, go to HEAR The Plainsman. Look at it if you like, but if you want a really novel and thrilling experience, tie a bandanna over your eyes. You will hear an honestly remarkable tone-poem. This score was composed for Paramount Pictures by George Antheil, the young composer whose early efforts with airplane propellers and siren whistles were laughable. Seven or eight years ago nobody would have seen where his experiments could lead, or what justification there was for them. Now Boris Morros of Hollywood turns him loose on the screen saga of Wild Bill Hickock, and Antheil turns in a tense, integrated opulent deeply expressive operatic score, whose themes (thank God!) are early Western American folk tunes, and whose orchestration is as modern as television. Antheil's work in this medium has stature, assurance, and that good tasting quality that means roots in the earth functionalism— something that belongs to the for which it was created and without would be incomplete

To these pictures music lent an over tone which enriched their significance and dramatic appeal.

Of course, Hollywood has one thing to contribute to music that music lacks to a pitiable degree in almost every other presentation, showmanship. No opera house on earth can compare with a Hollywood when it comes to mounting a show, because it has not the financial reso because it has not the almost madden bility and fluidity of the screen wor

Schools Set Code To Approve Films

An informal understanding of conditions for cooperation between the public schools of Bridgeport, Conn., and the theatre managers for the "promotion of high type pictures" has been drawn up by Worcester Warren, Superintendent of Schools, as follows:

"The management will take the initiative in asking the superintendent for his approval of the picture.

"The main feature will be approved if it has the approval of such organizations as the National Council of English Teachers. If it does not and seems worthy to the manager, the superintendent will request a committee possibly composed of teacher representative of the elementary point of view, teacher representative of the high school English point of view and a parent from the City Council of the Parent-Teachers Association, and, others it seems advisable, to attend a preview of the picture. With their approval the superintendent will give the same consideration as if approved by a national organization.

"The superintendent will insist that the accompanying picture be fit for children to see. He will accept the assurance of the manager of the theatre on this until he finds this assurance unreliable at which time he will either refuse to cooperate with the manager further or insist on a preview of every accompanying picture no matter how worthy the main feature.

"The consideration that will be given to approved pictures will be as in the past, permission to announce the film in the buildings, to post reasonable advertising in the corridors and to give the teachers permission to discuss the picture with students capable of interest in it.

"Essay contests—the School does not expect to undertake responsibility for conducting essay contests but will announce approved contests in which children can participate outside of class and send essays to an outside group of judges."

National Decency Legion Reviews 14 New Pictures

Of 14 new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week eight were approved for general patronage, five were noted as unobjectionable for adults and one was cited as objectionable in part. The new pictures and their classification are as follows.

Class A-1, "Unobjectionable for General Patronage:" "The Dead March," "A Doctor's Diary," "God's Country and the Woman," "Larceny on the Air," "The Mighty Treve," "A Million to One," "They Wanted To Marry," "Round-Up Time in Texas." Class A-2, "Unobjectionable for Adults:" "Bulldog Drummond Escapes," "The Eternal Mask," "Green Light," "Men Are Not Gods," "Under Cover of Night." Class B, "Objectionable in Part:" "Broken Blossoms."

"Winterset" Selected In Foreign Press Poll

"Winterset" was judged the best American picture released in 1936 in a poll of 39 foreign correspondents in New York conducted by Ernest Gunther, representative for Der Film, German trade paper. Following "Winterset" were: "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," "Modern Times," "Story of Louis Pasteur," "Romeo and Juliet," "Fury," "The Great Ziegfeld," "San Francisco," "These Three," and "The Green Pastures." Honorable mentions went to "Dodsworth," "My Man Godfrey," "Lloyds of London," "Anthony Adverse," "Charge of the Light Brigade" and "Mary of Scotland."

United Artists To Handle New Series of Cartoons

United Artists has completed arrangements for distribution of a new cartoon series in Technicolor to be based on the Percy L. Crosby comic strip character "Skippy." There are to be nine releases annually. Heading the new cartoon production unit are Kenneth McLellan, former head animator for Walt Disney, and Norman Stevenson, former Disney production manager. A staff of five animators and 40 artists has been assembled. The series is designed to replace the Disney cartoons which will be distributed by RKO next season.

Award Procedure Is Changed by Academy

Two outstanding changes in the methods of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and sciences award nominations and voting were announced late last week by Frank Capra, president. The changes involve the presentation of the award for the best performance by an actor in a supporting role and by an actress in a supporting role in addition to the best performance award.

The system of nominations also underwent a change. Four major awards, for production, acting, directing and writing will be made through a committee of 50 chosen from five Academy branches. Members will nominate five leading choices for each award with general membership electing the winners by ballot. Heretofore, each branch made its own nominations.

Loew Openings on Thursday

New York filmgoers will be changing their theatre habits when the new "Loew calendar" goes into full effect, starting Thursday, when one group of Loew's theatres will change from Friday to Thursday openings. In succeeding weeks, other groups will shift to the Thursday openings until the entire Loew circuit goes on a Thursday opening basis. For years, Fridays have been the first days of the new weekend shows at Loew's.

PARAMOUNT SETS 22 TOP FILMS FOR 1937-38

Zukor Says Stars and Directors Have Been Named; Two Will Be in Color

Paramount already has set 22 of the more important productions of the 52 or more for the 1937-38 season, Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board and head of production, revealed at a press luncheon Wednesday in New York at the Hotel Astor immediately after his arrival from Hollywood. After presiding over a meeting of the Paramount board Thursday he was to go to Washington for the opening of "Champagne Waltz," Paramount Silver Jubilee picture.

For the 22 pictures, stars have been selected and directors assigned, and the studio machinery is already underway for actual production, Mr. Zukor said. Several of the stories already are in the hands of their directors.

Stars and leading players assigned to the 22 productions include Claudette Colbert, Mae West, Gary Cooper, Marlene Dietrich, Bing Crosby, Fred MacMurray, Carole Lombard, George Raft, Herbert Marshall, Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Frances Farmer, Martha Raye, Bob Burns, Sir Guy Standing, Irene Dunne, Gladys Swarthout, Ida Lupino, Randolph Scott, Dorothy Lamour and Ernest Cossart.

Among the directors assigned are Cecil B. DeMille, Frank Lloyd, Ernst Lubitsch, Wesley Ruggles, Henry Hathaway, Rouben Mamoulian, Leo McCarey, A. Edward Sutherland, Mitchell Leisen, Alexander Hall, Frank Tuttle and William Wellman.

Two of next season's releases already are finished, "Souls at Sea" and "High, Wide and Handsome." "Angel," starring Marlene Dietrich, will be in work shortly and scripts of five others are ready for shooting. Six or eight are to be finished this summer.

Mr. Zukor said the advance planning is expected to result in marked studio savings.

Leading Films Listed

The 1937-38 leading pictures, without reference to order of release, follow: "Spawn of the North," to be in Technicolor; "Beau Geste," also in Technicolor; "Buccaneer," directed and produced by Cecil B. DeMille; "Angel," with Marlene Dietrich; "I, James Lewis," with Claudette Colbert; "Double or Nothing," Bing Crosby, Marthe Raye and Dorothy Lamour; "High, Wide and Handsome," Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott, Dorothy Lamour; "The Big Broadcast of 1938," Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Stokowsky's orchestra, Bob Burns; "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray; "Souls at Sea," with Gary Cooper, George Raft, Frances Dee; another Dietrich picture; "One More Spring," Bing Crosby; "Artists and Models," Jack Benny; "Victor Herbert," Irene Dunne; "Madame Butterfly," Gladys Swarthout; "Caviar for His Excellency," George Raft and Gail Patrick; Harold Lloyd starring comedy; "What Ho," Gary Cooper, to be produced by Emanuel Cohen's Major Productions; Mae West starring picture for Major Productions; "Show Business," Jack Benny and Gladys Swarthout; "Gambler's Maxim," George Raft, Frances Farmer, Ida Lupino, and "Cuckoo College," with Jack Benny and Martha Raye.

Mr. Zukor said color was practical only when it blended with the story being filmed.

He compared double features to an epidemic, said they are considered "good or evil, depending on whom they affect," and predicted the practice eventually would die out. Better pictures and longer playing dates were doing more to eliminate duals than anything else, in his opinion.

Mr. Zukor said television was too far off to comment on it, but that if, and when, it was perfected he had no doubt that film showmen would take it over since they had the material desired by the public to sell.

"B" Picture Policy

Indications are that a definite policy in regard to Paramount's "B" picture production for the balance of the season will be decided upon at conferences between home office executives and Mr. Zukor this week in New York. No substantial change in production policy is regarded as likely in advance of the new season, however.

A special deal for Mr. Zukor, involving a percentage of profits, which has been discussed by directors of the company, will have to be submitted to and approved by Paramount stockholders before being placed in effect.

Approximately $5,500,000 of Paramount's first preferred $100 par stock has been converted into common, representing more than 21 per cent of the total number of shares of first preferred issued for claims allowed in the reorganization proceedings.

The first preferred is convertible at one share for seven of common, resulting in an increase of approximately 385,000 shares in the common outstanding, or a total of 1,995,000 shares of common. The second preferred is convertible at the rate of 10 shares for nine shares of common, hence conversion of this issue has little effect on the total number of shares outstanding. There are 4,500,000 shares of common authorized, 2,300,000 of which were set aside for conversion purposes; 1,610,000 were originally oustanding, and the remainder are in the company treasury.

Paramount Pictures, Inc., will have earnings for the final quarter of 1936 equivalent to $1.85 a share on the common stock, Wall Street reported.

Paramount has reorganized its talent department. The school has been placed under the direction of Oliver Hinsdale, who recently left a similar post with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Ted Lesser, former assistant to Mr. Zukor, will work under the supervision of A. M. Botsford. Melville Shauer, in charge of the department since the resignation of Jack Votion, has resumed his duties as an associate producer.

Momand Appeal Action Opens in Oklahoma City

The appeal of A. B. Momand, Shawnee operator, in a $4,000,000 suit in Oklahoma City, charging conspiracy, was adjourned without date Tuesday when Federal Judge George T. McDermott dropped dead in court.

The case appears on the docket as A. B. Momand, appellant, vs. Paramount Publix Corporation, et al. Eighteen other motion picture companies are listed as appellees, including Publix Theatres, United Artists, RKO, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Warners, Vitagraph, Inc., Vitaphone Corporation, Warner Brothers Theatres, First National Pictures, Fox Films, Columbia Pictures, MGM, Universal, Griffith Amusement Company, Consolidated Amusement Company, Consolidated Theatres, Educational Film Exchange and John B. 200 in London Pay Tribute to Zukor

by BRUCE ALLAN

in London

Two hundred members of the British motion picture industry attended the Adolph Zukor Jubilee luncheon in the Empire Rooms of the Trocadero in London Wednesday. Presiding was Montague Goldman, general sales manager in England, for Paramount Film Service. On the dais were Sir William Jury, managing director of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Ltd.; Colonel A. C. Bromhead, one of the founders of Gaumont British; Sam Eckman, managing director of MGM in England; John Maxwell, managing director of British International Pictures; Herbert Wilcox, head of Herbert Wilcox Productions, and Bebe Daniels.

Among those present: Sidney L. Bernstein, managing director of Bernstein Theatres and Denham London Cinemas; Captain Richard Norton, director of British and Dominion Films; Sir Albert Clavering, of Clavering and Rose; Phil Hyams, H. and G. Cinemas, and Arthur W. Jarrett, director of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, booking controller for GB.

An exceptional exhibition of showmanship was displayed by Earl St. John, director of exploitation for Paramount Theatres, Ltd., who screened "Queen Elizabeth" during the luncheon and who had arranged proceedings so that after the luncheon the walls of the room sank, disclosing a tableau of the Paramount trade mark with a photograph of Mr. Zukor surrounded by living figures dressed to typify past big feature successes of Paramount, such as "The Sheik" and "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." The climax was the raising of a living figure representing "Champagne Waltz."

Mr. Goldman toasted Mr. Zukor as a builder and prophet. Mr. Maxwell recalled that Mr. Zukor gave a contract for three pictures from the old British National with £50,000 advance on each. This company was Mr. Maxwell's introduction to production and the Zukor contract was its chief asset. "With the 1929 crash he didn't retire but took off his coat and started again," Mr. Maxwell said.

Sir William Jury said he had tried to buy "Queen Elizabeth" but Gaumont outbid him. Mr. Eckman, for the Kinematograph Renters Society, recalled that "Queen Elizabeth" was his first feature in a "super circuit" consisting of one hall seating 299.

Among the guests was Mrs. J. D. Walker, whose husband established the first Famous Players-Lasky branch in England.

Screen Club Formed By Denver Group

Plans for the formulation of a Rocky Mountain Screen Club were completed in Denver this week with the election of directors and officers of the new organization. Harry Golub was chosen president, Chester Bell, first vice-president, Joseph Dekker second vice-president, Ross Bluck secretary, Harry Goodridge treasurer and Emmett Thurman counsellor. The directors include Gene Gerbase, Al Hoffman, R. J. Morrison, Eddie Loy, J. H. Ashby, Charles Gilmour, Louis Finske, Rick Ricketson, Buzz Briggs, Frank Culp, David Cockrill, David Davis and Jack Langon.

E. H. Mayer writes from Ohio about the nursery rhymes that are played on the chimes of Christ Church, in Glendale, near Cincinnati, when a baby is born. A recurrence of the Dionne Quintuplets would rate "I've Got Plenty of Something."

Terry Ramsaye left Hollywood the other day to return to his desk in New York. Before taking his departure, however, he wired ahead his personal nomination to win the 1937 medal for something or other, the nomination taking the form of a publicity statement issued by Paul Snell, of Hollywood's Principal Pictures, and reading, in part, as follows:

Howard Shonting, our correspondent in Massachusetts, now reports that a Bostonian has just returned from the North, and he says that some of the shows in Bethel smell.

Ben is now bald, but spry, and although he's not "broke," he would like to do a little work in or around the studios to keep him in the swim, even offering to tend the gate at any studio.

"I'd be terrific as a gatekeeper," he winked one of his zigzag eyes. "Imagine—the only guy in the picture business who could see 'em coming and going."

The height of something or other in hero worship was reached in London where an unnamed native beauty went to the tattoo shop of George Burchett, on Waterloo Road, and had him needle an "engraved" portrait of Gary Cooper on her lovely back. From Louis comes the story concerning Evelyn Laye and Gloria Swanson, who, driving toward the Twenty-one Club, the other evening, had as their genial jehu, an undersized cab-driver who insisted upon offering them peanuts. Gently, but firmly, they refused. He persisted. "They're good for you—go on, have some," he urged. But Miss Swanson purred—"We're so sorry—we're singers, you see. Peanuts are bad for our throats." As they came to a halt at a red light, the cabbie turned around, surveyed Miss Swanson carefully and slightly disdainfully and chirped: "I suppose you're Lily Pons." "Not quite," Gloria murmured, "but my friend here (pointing to Evelyn Laye) is Miss Grace Moore." FEDERAL AGENTS STUDY FAN CLUB "RACKET"

Investigators of Post Office and Justice Departments Study Threats of Star "Boycotts"

Postal and Justice Department officials in Washington are understood to be investigating complaints from motion picture stars over free trips to Hollywood which they are said to have been forced to finance for "officials" of "movie fan clubs" under threat of "boycotting" of their product. The motion picture colony in California is said to be fearing a spread of the socalled "racket."

While neither the Post Office nor Justice Department officials would discuss the matter, it is understood that the one has received complaints and the other has been approached with an appeal for action.

Method of Operation

The method of operation of these "clubs" is to write to some star suggesting that a trip to Hollywood for the "fan-club" officials would increase greatly the popularity and prestige of the player and, conversely, suggesting that failure to "come through" with the expense money would so disgust the "fans" that they would boycott the player's pictures.

So far as the Post Office Department is concerned, it was said there has been no suggestion of a crusade against film fan clubs, but that any complaints received would be referred to the inspector in charge at Los Angeles. No such references have been made from Washington but it was said the Los Angeles office might have been called into the situation without first drawing the matter to the attention of Washington.

Department of Justice officials were even less communicative, adhering to the policy of secrecy followed with respect to investigations up to the time of court action. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, however, is running up to lesser racketeers who, unless checked, may some day achieve greater proportions.

In Motion Picture Herald issue of November 21st it was revealed that the American public also is being shorn of some $1,000,000 a year by "racketeering" fan clubs which, recognizing the success of the legitimate fan club, are cashing in on the public's gullibility.

Calls Chicago Headquarters

It is the directors of these bogus organizations who are believed to have grown bold enough to contact the stars directly and demand their tribute from them, threatening the "boycott" when refused.

Peyton Watkins, head of the Twentieth Century-Fox fan mail department in Hollywood, observed that Chicago appeared to be the headquarters for many of the "racketeering" clubs.

"I once discovered that a Chicago man simultaneously had written three different players on the lot asking approval for formation of a fan club in the name of each," Mr. Watkins said. "I investigated and found the man already had four other fan clubs flourishing, with the players of another lot being used as 'bait.' These cheap racketeers work on a wholesale basis, planning first to get around 10 cents from club members. It is extremely profitable for them, as an average club has at least 1,000 members."

Single Feature Law Cuts Budapest Total

The decrease in the number of features exhibited in Budapest under the operation of the recent government edict prohibiting the showing of any but single bills in Hungarian theatres, is indicated in figures for the first three months of the new system.

In the three months to October, 1935, 66 features were shown in local first runs, while in the same period in 1936, 52 films were shown, a decrease of 20 per cent. American product was far in the lead, the 52 divided as follows: American, 25; Hungarian, six; German, nine; Austrian, four; French, seven, and Czechoslovakian, one.

The most recent American importations in first runs in Budapest were rated at the box-office as follows: "San Francisco," excellent; "The General Died at Dawn," very good; "Georgeous Hussy," "Showboat" and "Robin Hood of El Dorado," poor.

If present production plans for the new season are realized, a total of 30 to 35 Hungarian productions will be released next year. Motion picture reviewers, however, who were extremely lenient with domestic product in the early stages of its development, have become increasingly critical, on the belief that the native product has become strong enough to stand impartial criticism.

Czechoslovakia Revises Plan for Film Subsidy

New regulations governing the granting of subsidies to producers of features in the Czech language have been adopted by the Film Advisory Board of Czechoslovakia, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from the United States commercial attache in Prague. Under the contemplated plan productions will be divided into four groups: those which the board does not recognize; those which the board recognizes and accords a subsidy of 70,000 crowns ($25,000); those which the board recommends and accords a subsidy of 140,000 ($50,000) and those which the board considers of exceptional quality and accords a subsidy of 210,000 crowns ($75,000).

RADIO PAYING $3,000,000 YEARLY FOR FILM TALENT

Hollywood Is Now Definitely Established as the Chief Source of Talent Supply for U. S. Air Entertainment

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Radio has $3,000,000 a year to use in enticing the best of Hollywood's motion picture talent to the air for appearances in popular entertainment broadcasts.

With Hollywood talent welcoming the new alliance, radio today lays claim to the motion picture's talent roster as its chief source of supply. Exhibitors' complaints against the use of Hollywood players, allegedly in competition to theatre box offices, evidently have been unavailing, for not only have radio's large broadcasters taken possession of the motion picture's talent but they intend to strengthen their hold in Hollywood.

Radio's national broadcasters have yielded to the strong demands for the services of motion picture stars made by their liberal sponsoring advertisers, spending $100,000,000 annually on the air alone, and in six months have so literally moved in on the motion picture talent market that Hollywood stands today nearly as important to the radio field as a purveyor of amusement as to the screen.

It is almost entirely an arrangement between the air advertisers and stars, with broadcasters and producers as witnesses. To the stars it is bringing 3,000,000 a year. All parties concerned appear satisfied over the results: The broadcasters are successfully delivering to their advertisers the sales medium specified; the producers feel they are benefiting by the "free" occasional mention of their motion pictures.

There is, however, a little uneasiness among the producers, caused by the vociferous complaints expressed by their own customers, the exhibitors, against the stars' radio shows competing with the same players' simultaneous appearances on screens.

Radio's union with Hollywood has been in the making ever since the first successful commercial broadcast, some 16 years ago. Its crystallization, however, really began only six months ago—at the beginning of the fall programs. Now, they say that Shirley Temple and Mae West are the only stars in Hollywood who cannot be reached by radio for a price.

In the six months from July 1st to December 31st, some 235 motion picture players made 532 "guest" appearances on the air, and additionally performed hundreds of times in 24 series of programs which in the period featured stellar film names. Besides, Hollywood shared other players with the air—those considered as combination radio-film performers, stage-film performers, concert-film performers, as follows:

Class (Forte)	Number of Players	Percentage	Number of Guest Appearances	Number of Series of Programs
MOTION PICTURE PLAYERS........	235	53%	381	24
RADIO-FILM PLAYERS	55	12	49	39
STAGE-FILM PLAYERS	50	11	71	6
STAGE-RADIO-FILM PLAYERS	28	6	31	30
MISCELLANEOUS (Concert-Films, etc.)	78	18	..	..
	446	100%	532	99

To broadcasters' charges that Hollywood has "stolen" virtually all of radio's talent, and, therefore, they have been forced to transport their microphones to Hollywood Boulevard, the foregoing chart provides a rebuttal. Where radio took 235 "straight-film" players for commercial broadcasts in the last six months of 1936 alone, motion pictures used only 55 players who had radio associations. Less than a dozen of those were of the top rank, whereas the stars taken from films by radio represented the best available, as witness the following compilation of "straight-film" players who made air broadcasts in the period from July 1st to December 31st:

performances, all of them guest performances.

Grand Totals Film Players:
233 players appeared in 381 guest appearances and 24 series programs.

The roster of motion picture players on the air from July 1st to December 31st reads like Motion Picture Almanac's "who's who" on the screen. The only first-grade star names not making air appearances in the six months including Richard Arlen, George Arliss, Reginald Denny, Marlene Dietrich, Richard Dix, Louise Dresser, Ann Dvorak, Sally Eilers, Leon Errol, Louise Fazenda, W. C. Fields, Wallace Ford, Greta Garbo, Janet Gaynor, Ann Harding, Laurel and Hardy, Shirley Temple, Mae West, Raymond Hatton, Katharine Hepburn, Jack Holt, Miriam Hopkins, Sybil Jason, Victor Jory, Ian Keith, Victor McLaglen and Fredric March. It is to be noted that Shirley Temple, without any radio appearances, was the exhibitors' choice as money making star of 1936 as well as 1935, in Motion Picture Herald's annual canvass.

In addition to players' air performances, 66 appearances were made by non-actors. Film executives, on the air, all for single guest performances, included: Merlin Hall Aylesworth, chairman of the board of RKO; Al Altman, MGM's Eastern talent scout; Fernando Barrionuevo, of United Artists' foreign department; Dorothy Bucknall, of MGM Studio's research department; Lou Diamond, in charge of Paramount's short subject distribution; Walt Disney, the cartoon producer; Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists; Louis B. Mayer, in charge of Metro's productions; Nathaniel Shilkret, in charge of RKO's musical department; Sylvan Simon, Universal's sound test director; Homer G. Tasker, president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers; Major Albert Warner, vice-president of Warner Brothers, and Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, of the Motion Picture Producers Association on the Coast, and the range of Motion picture personnel on the air included Bill McDowell, head gate tender of the Paramount Hollywood studio, and voice counterparts of Mickey Mouse, Minnie Mouse and Donald Duck.

Producers who broadcast included Alexander Korda, Jesse L. Lasky, Mervyn Le Roy, Mary Pickford, Max Reinhardt, Tom Terriss, and others. Cecil B. DeMille was the paid broadcaster for an entire series, while some of his directorial colleagues on the air included Rouben Mamoulian, Fred Niblo, John Blystone, Frank Borzage, D. W. Griffith, William K. Howard.

The air contributed but a few "big names" to the screen:—Kate Smith, Lanny Ross, Burns and Allen, Joe Penner, Rudy Vallee, Bing Crosby, Nelson Eddy. The performances of radio-film players were recorded as follows:

FILMS IGNORE RADIO ADVERTISING MEDIUM

Thirty-six different types of product employ motion picture stars as "salesmen" on national, sponsored air programs—embracing almost every type of merchandise intended for large public consumption. To date, however, the motion picture stands practically the lone exception in the list of large advertisers who feel that selling results can be obtained on the air. Little, if any, of the motion picture's annual national $80,000,000 advertising budget goes to radio for advertising time.

Another class of player to which the motion picture has a strong claim, and to which radio staked a claim equally strong is the socalled "stage-and-film" player, whose air performances in the six months totaled as follows:

Film-Stage Players on the Air, from July 1 to Dec. 31	No. of Guest Appearances	No. of Series Programs
Leslie Howard	6	1

18 players appeared in 43 guest appearances, and 6 series programs; 28 players appeared in single performances.

Grand Totals, Film-Stage Players:
46 players appeared in 71 guest appearances, and 6 series programs.

In addition to the previous groups, combination film-stage-and-radio players who performed on the air from July 1st to December 31st, include:

Then there is the concert-film-radio performer, all "top-notch," and all singers—operatic and otherwise—who appeared on the air in the past six months as follows:

Film-Concert-Radio Players on the Air from July 1 to Dec. 31	No. of Guest Appearances	No. of Series Programs

Radio's advertisers today are using the popularity of motion picture stars to sell everything from canned beans and laxatives to chewing gum and electrical applicances, coal, tin cans, ice, dandruff removers, patented medicines and body-odor antidotes. Thus while the motion picture is spending some $80,000,000 a year to advertise and publicize the glamour of its stars, radio uses them—for a price, of course—to dispense Kraft Cheese, Campbell's Soup,

We're on the Jury

(Radio)

Satirical Comedy

If the public is made aware of the amusement treat this picture holds, particularly for family type audiences, the exhibitor should have a cheerful story from the box office. Where fresh, wholesome semi-farce comedy, contrasted with a vein of light drama and including a suggestion of love interest, is understood and appreciated, the show should do all right by itself. Although the cast lists no super draw names, the picture as a whole is spun of elements that lend themselves readily to commercial exploitation. Additionally it is one that can be depended upon to engender plenty word of mouth advertising.

Freshly contrived from Fred Ballard's play, "Ladies of the Jury," made about six years ago as a picture under that title, the original premise is retained, but the inclusion of much new dialogue and many different situations give it a character that should not permit anyone to say that he has seen this picture before.

Starting as a mystery melodrama with the killing of Patterson and the accusation of his wife, the show quickly takes on its true satirical comedy atmosphere. Prosecutor Van Cobb and defense attorney proceed to selection of the jury, and what a jury it is, with irascible realtor J. Clarence Beaver and society dowager Mrs. Dean as eleventh and twelfth members. Judge Prime looks at the motley mob with trepidation as to what will happen to justice. The case is tried, and with maid Clara furnishing conclusive testimony, prosecutor Van Cobb is certain of Mrs. Patterson's conviction. In the jury room, the first vote is 11 to 1 for conviction, with Mrs. Dean the lone holdout. First winning over Steve, Mrs. Dean goes to work on the rest, meanwhile driving Judge Prime almost frantic with requests for interpretations and guidance. Playing one member off against the other, fostering Steve's romance and working hard on Beaver, Mrs. Dean, by smartly creating the impression that Clara lied in her testimony, wins four converts to her side.

Then, to prove her contention that Mrs. Patterson could not be guilty, Mrs. Dean demands that court, judge, witnesses and jury move to the scene of the murder and that the crime be reenacted. Her disregard for legal procedure having aroused Prime's ire, he finally consents, and the whole kit and kaboodle moves out en masse. There, with sacred Beaver portraying Patterson's role, Mrs. Beaver proves her point to exonerate the suspect, trap Clara in her lying and nab the killer.

Well prepared, produced, acted and directed, the picture is the thing to sell in this case. As much attention as possible should be devoted to convincing prospective patronage that in "We're on the Jury" there is an attraction worthy of their time and attention. Ostensibly pointing no moral, the picture, however, does emphasize many familiar fallacies in the present day system of jurisprudence.

Previewed in the RKO Hillstreet theatre, Los Angeles. The typical downtown transient audience reacted enthusiastically. There did not seem to be any inclination on its part to think otherwise than it had seen a brand new picture. Lobby comment after the showing did not seem to tie the picture up with "Ladies of the Jury," which, incidentally, was given its preview six years ago last month in this same theatre.—GUS MCCARTHY.

Fair Warning

(20th Century-Fox)

Romantic Drama

In history, forbidding Death Valley has been the locale of many strange and awesome happenings. It is to be doubted, however, that the bizarre natural sink ever witnessed anything actually so exciting as this bit of imaginative melodramatic mystery, ultra twentieth century romance and modern comedy. Photographically, "Fair Warning" is back-grounded by the Valley's arid scenery. Literally, with a swank resort hotel providing the locale, it tells an intelligently complicated murder mystery story. It doesn't divert much from formula construction or composition in that a whole horde of tourists, residents and drop-ins become a multiplicity of suspects or that the first killing precipitates several more, but it does differ in the kind of character it calls upon to solve the crimes and the manner in which he is enabled to do it.

Romance has first fling. With bathing suit clad Betty Furness and newcomer John Howard Payne surrounded by bevies of swimming pool bathing beauties, little indication is immediately given of the ensuing melodrama. However, this is not long delayed as a Mr. Pling succumbs to assault. As something sinister attaches itself to the character of Dr. Galt, comes Matthew Jericho, a combination grocery store owner-and-detective, to see what can be done about the dirty work. Many of the visiting tourists become suspects, some of them are bumped off, and as the romance between Kay and Jim continues under handicaps and comedy is introduced by pestiferous little Malcolm Berkhardt, who has become a sort of unofficial assistant to Jericho, the original and combined killing investigations continue apace. Then it begins to be revealed that the discovery of a lost gold mine is the underlying motive for all the terrorism and carnage. Building to a weird climax, the film logically explains all that the gold mine had to do with the case, who the killer was and why. As audiences have been baffled during the picture's unreeling, they should be similarly surprised with its conclusion.

Although the basic plot is familiar, the manner in which it has been worked out is refreshingly different, and the picture is well prepared, acted and directed. The fact that Death Valley was selected as the locale gives the film a not common setting. While the cast contains no exceptional or important names, the various members go about their work with a spirit that gives the show convincing realism. This fact, combined with the different location, can be considered exploitation assets for other than routine handling of a mystery melodrama.

Previewed in the Uptown Theatre, Los Angeles. This house, which lately has apparently become an experimental laboratory for crime dramas, is patronized by audiences which seem to have a particular liking for this sort of entertainment. Their reaction indicated that "Without Warning" met all standards and introduced a few novelties.—G. M.

The Eternal Mask

(Mayer-Burstyn)

Psychological Drama

Widely apart from what may be called the mean average foreign-language film, and in many interesting ways as widely apart from domestic product, stands in a special place of its own "The Eternal Mask," produced by Progress Films of Berne, Switzerland, and supplied with English interpretative titles for the American trade.

Hailed in unanimously favorable newspaper reviews on its American premiere at the Filmarte cinema in New York as the first psychiatric film, the production is in some danger of becoming generally classified among the merely art-y items commonly brought to these shores for exhibition to the feverish few who find their way into the alcove theatres where such are shown and emerge therefrom to scold Hollywood with various familiar phrases. "The Eternal Mask" does not belong in that category. It is an exceptionally fine photoplay which happens to deal with an unusual theme, nevertheless, a theme which might have been dealt with by an American producer had it come to hand and no doubt will be sooner or later.

The story is that of young Doctor Dumartin whose confidence in an anti-meningitis serum he has produced leads him to administer it to a patient whose life has been despaired of. When death ensues the patient's widow hysterically charges the doctor and his serum with responsibility. He leaves the hospital where he is a respected staff member, seeking to lose himself in the city, and while in a deeply melancholy state reads newspaper stories about the case which influence him to attempt suicide by drowning.

Rescued, he believes he is another person searching for the missing doctor Dumartin. His superiors seek by old-fashioned methods to restore his reason, frankly considering him insane. During this treatment he is subject to hallucinations graphically and logically depicted in the film. Ultimately a younger member of the staff is permitted to apply modern psychiatry to his case and a cure is effected.

Production and direction are finely attuned to the nature of the story. Performances are strong in simple allegiance to characterization. There is no extraneous incident and there are no secondary story elements or humorous interludes. In its depiction of the experiences resulting in the principal's mental state and the fancied experiences which follow the film is a splendid demonstration of motion picture technique.

Les Petits

(Franco-American)

French Comedy Drama

This is a not especially significant or tremendous French film, presenting what appears to be, so far as English titles supplied somewhat sparingly divulge, life as it is lived by children in French boarding schools. It is possible, perhaps, to regard it also as a psychological study of the juvenile under mildly dramatic circumstances, but its value as such, if any, is not glaringly evident to the Anglo-Saxon ear.

The picture offers a simple story in which a girl and boy committed to a boarding school, neither of them happily, are attracted to each other and come to regard their sympathetic relationship as equivalent to that of husband and wife. Grotesquely caricatured faculty members, entrusted with their care, misinterpret the situation, expel the boy and summon the girl's guardian to withdraw her. (Reaction of an audience evidently accustomed to French dialogue seemed to regard much of this as comic.) The boy becomes lost and is believed drowned but returns ultimately to his father's home, where he is reunited with the girl and it becomes manifest that their mutual interest is merely that of normal children.

Reviewed, under linguistic handicap, at the Cinema de Paris, New York, which is patronized by people who like French films and seemed to consider this one average.—W.R.W.

Slalom

(George Kraska)

Romance on Skis

Against a background of the snow capped Alps in Switzerland, a light romantic story has been woven around the sport of skiing. The "Slalom" is an obstacle race, and the title is peculiarly fitted to the story as well, incidental as it is. It relates the adventures of a girl (Hella Hartwich) who, having quarreled with her fiance, undertakes to master the art of skiing to prove her independence of him and to "show him up."

The highlights of the production center about the two ski enthusiasts, one tall (Walter Riml) and one short (Guzzi Lantschner), who take it upon themselves to teach Miss Hartwich the sport. Comedians on the skis, they are also masters of every intricate maneuver. The amazing ease with which these two glide up and down the mountainside is a particular delight of the picture.

One sequence of their exploits, to indicate one of many unusual shots, involves a chase in which they are pursued by a gendarme on skis. The policeman in a fall is separated from his boots, which continue downward strapped to the skis.

Miss Hartwich, becoming adept at the sport, enters the winter sports competition dressed as a boy. She defeats her fiance. Then a reconciliation is effected.

The picture has very little dialogue. Photography is excellent.

Four Days Wonder

(Universal)

Comedy-Melodrama

Well produced and pleasantly acted, this picture contains definite interest and entertainment value for the family audience. Opening with what looks like the makings of another murder mystery, the production forsakes this theme and concentrates on the more saleable features of a fast paced and refreshingly blended comedy-melodrama.

Exploitation possibilities are not many, but nevertheless tangible. The vehicle serves to introduce to the screen a charming new personality, the young and very talented Miss Jeanne Dante, who last year scored such an outstanding hit in the New York Theatre Guild's presentation of "Call It a Day." Playing opposite Miss Dante and matching her in acting ability is another juvenile in the person of Kenneth Howell. Indeed, much of the picture's entertainment value is due to the winning naturalness of these two youthful players. Capable support is given the young folk by Martha Sleeper, Margaret Irving, Charles Williams and Spencer Charters. Alan Mowbray in the role of a mystery novelist more infatuated with himself than his craft and Walter Catlett as a dumb but hilarious detective provide much of the story's many comic minutes. The fact that this altogether pleasing story was fashioned from one of the novels by the noted English penman A. A. Milne may hold some attraction for the more literary minded of the fans. The title itself suggests teasing possibilities for exploitation.

Trouble begins for Miss Dante when she discovers the dead form of her Aunt Jessica, Margaret Irving, who much the worse from liquor has slipped on the polished floor and fallen heavily against a metal doorstep. Miss Dante becomes panicky and, in her fear that she will be unjustly accused of the death because of the unfriendly relations that existed between the aunt and her niece, she runs away. The law, in the person of Mr. Catlett, arrives on the scene and finds Miss Dante's handkerchief.

Complications grow thicker and more confused and the action faster and more suspenseful when Mowbray, as the dim-witted novelist brother of Howell, inadvertently pawns one of Miss Dante's rings, which had been given to him by his secretary, Martha Sleeper. Naturally enough the evidence is traced and the mad Mr. Catlett hurries onto the scene

Counterfeit Lady

(Columbia)

Melodrama

This modest melodrama pertains to the theft and recovery of a $30,000 diamond, to a series of subsequent thefts and recoveries and, of course, ultimate restoration of the gem to its owner. Characters principally involved in the reasonably credible incidents are a pretty girl, an honest jeweler, a dishonest jeweler, assorted crooks, sundry detectives and John Pierce, the character portrayed by Ralph Bellamy, whose adventures and romance chiefly engage the lens.

The story is told in chronological sequence and the players are experienced in and generally associated with the type of work assigned them. Action transpires in a metropolitan city, a village, a roadhouse, a small town hotel, a cottage and aboard cross country buses, taxicabs, large and small passenger motor cars, covering considerable territory. Various characters supply comedy relief at intervals. There are fist fights and there is brandishing of guns, but no one is killed. Justice triumphs.

The gem in question has been stolen from a small town jeweler, who is indicted for the crime, and his daughter traces it to a city jeweler from whom she steals it back. He employs John Pierce, a free lance detective, to recover it from the girl, then employs two thugs to beat Pierce to the assignment. In the adventures that ensue Pierce outwits the thugs, recovers the jewel, returns it to the head of a jewelers' association which appears to have been his undercover employer all along, wins the girl and so forth.

Sensation

(BIP-Wardour, London)

Crime Mystery

From the play "Murder Gang," by the London crime reporter George Munro and Basil Dean, this picture offers the rather unusual angle that a newspaper specialist on crime, after bringing about the capture of a murderer and obtaining a "scoop" for his paper by getting the criminal's love letters to his wife, revolts against his sordid job, hands the letters back to the condemned man's wife and resigns his job.

Additional interest lies in the picture of the typical group of newspaper men, known as "the Murder Gang," who flock to the scene of each new crime, try to outdo each other with the news and, when there is no news, create it. The characterizations here are very English and those acquainted with Fleet Street will find them difficult to reconcile with the facts of British newspaper life, but they certainly provide amusing incident and a plentiful supply of wisecracks which should get the laughs where they are understood. The incident is quickfire and the suspense interest very fairly maintained.

The best piece of acting comes from Joan Marion as the murderer's wife, but John Lodge as the hero. Margaret Vyner as his fiancee, Francis Lister as the murderer and Athene Seyler as a fake "medium" who tries to trace the criminal, all offer values.

It was thought an entertaining picture, with good suspense value, by the audience at a night trade show at the Piccadilly theatre, London. Much of the dialogue is ultra-British.—BRUCE ALLAN, London.

Hillbilly Capers

An amusing short subject, this production has El Brendel and his comedy style as its draw. Brendel innocently precipitates a feud between two mountaineer families when he, as the hired man for one family, courts the daughter of the other. The family Brendel works for also has a daughter who is keen on him. The head of the clan sends for a preacher but Brendel hies himself away from the place with the girl he loves. The upshot of a comedy situation has Brendel, the girl and the preacher all astride a bull with the preacher tieing the knot. Others in the cast are Phyllis Crane and Bud Jamison. Running time, 16 minutes.

Jimmie Lunceford and His Orchestra

(Warner Brothers)

Dance Band Presentation

For those who like their music hot and fast, the Negro maestro Jimmie Lunceford and his chocolate colored orchestra provide some tuneful syncopation. Myra Johnson, a dusky songster possessed of an energetic style of vocalizing, and a nimble footed dance team labeled the Three Brown Jacks render their specialties to pleasing if not spectacular results. The whole subject is paced in a lively and loud tempo and should entertain particularly the younger set of the audience. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Worm Turns

(United Artists)

Excellent

An excellent Mickey Mouse cartoon, this continues the high standard of entertainment value of these short subjects. Mickey Mouse turns chemist, concocting a "courage builder" solution with some interesting results. A fly turns on a spider, a mouse reverses the usual procedure with a cat, a cat with a dog, and Pluto practically annihilates a dogcatcher. Not the least of the subjects' joys is the variegated display of chemicals changing color. Running time, 8½ minutes.

Forest Gangsters

(RKO Radio)

Interesting

This subject is an interesting account of the activities of professional hunters engaged to rid a district of mountain lions and other killers of the forest. Mounted on horseback and with a pack of hounds to track down the killers, the hunters scour the countryside until the animal is cornered. The dogs, trained to follow the scent of a mountain lion, are momentarily halted by an engagement with a wildcat, but continuing on their way they overtake the lion. The lion climbs a tree, where it is captured alive. Running time, 10 minutes.

Merry Cafe

(Columbia)

Clever

A clever short subject has Krazy Kat trying to obtain a meal in an Automat restaurant without any money to put into the slots. The cat is on the verge of starvation when he is knocked out by one of the animals dining in the restaurant. He dreams that a large platter of food is before him. Before he can eat it the different foods become animated and protest being devoured. The cat then dreams he is being fed when he is revived by a group that has gathered around him. He proceeds to knock himself out so he can continue to dream. Running time, 7 minutes.

Deep South

(RKO Radio)

Negro Musical

This short subject features the Hall Johnson choir. In a southern setting and with a group of songs selected for their Negro origin, the subject opens in a cotton field where a number of Negroes are working. Word passes around that two of them are being married that day. The Negroes get the rest of the day off to build the newlyweds a cabin and to prepare for the feasting and dancing. Each development of the story is greeted by song, two of which were especially written for the subject. Running time, 17 minutes.

How To Become a Detective

(MGM)

Hilarious

The many fans that grew quite hysterical with laughter over Mr. Robert Benchley's didactic exposes on such sundry subjects as voting, sleeping and the training of a dog, must be warned that his latest lecture dealing with the manifold means of becoming an amateur sleuth is but another case of this humorist's assault on their risibilities. The perfect pedagogue, Mr. Benchley knows the value of example and accordingly illustrates his brief talks on criminal types, third degree methods and the proper procedure for conducting a prisoner to the hoosegow to begin a jail sentence. Hilarious demonstrations of the various techniques to be followed are shown with results that are fun for the audience and unfortunate for poor Mr. Benchley. The sly, satirical style of the comedian is infectious and the audience which relishes the Benchley brand of humor is bound to enjoy itself immensely. Running time, 10 minutes.

Vitaphone Pictorial Revue, No. 4

(Vitaphone)

Interesting

The composition of this latest issue of the Revues consists of various and intricate ways to test the worth and durability of department store merchandise; a demonstration of some of the methods used for deciding the mental and physical fitness of prospective aviators. For the piece de resistance, at least as far as the ladies are concerned, there is a glowing display in color of some of the latest fashion modes milady will sport during her winter hegira to the Southlands. Generally interesting, the subject will be a welcome addition to the completion of any program. Running time, 11 minutes.

Ladies' Day

(RKO Radio)

Sports

This sports subject, with Bill Corum, sports commentator, doing the narrating, devotes itself to the task of showing to what extent the feminine athlete or those athletically inclined have invaded the sports world. Emphasis is directed towards games with which girls are not generally associated, such as polo. Fencing, surf swimming, archery, golf and soft-ball baseball are included. With all due respects to this invasion it might be said in the light of this subject that the more graceful and accomplished girl athletes are in the sports of tennis, swimming and diving. Running time, 11 minutes.

The Hollanders

(Vitaphone)

Travelogue

Colored and composed of interesting ingredients showing diverting sidelights on the quaint life and people of Holland, this excursion into the land of windmills and dikes makes a novel bit of screen presentation. The exotic flavor of strange custom and dress is expertly reproduced. Some scenic shots, especially of sky and revolving windmills, are striking pictorial material. A unique ending is appended in a quick transition to a miniature of old Holland located at Holland, Michigan, which has been settled by persons of Holland origin and where many folkways of the old country are religiously kept in practice. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Hillbilly Goat

(RKO Radio)

Funny

Edgar Kennedy in this subject is a salesman for an electrical appliance company. In endeavoring to sell his wares to the hill-billies of the Blue Ridge country, Kennedy has occasion to do some of his typical face massaging when the hill-billies, afraid of the newfangled contraptions, use their firearms on the appliances. Impressed by Kennedy's glib talk, Si Jenks, storekeeper, agrees to take all of the stock if Kennedy can persuade Fern Emmett, a widow, to marry Jenks. Kennedy talks to the widow. The result is that the widow wants to marry Kennedy. He finally escapes after some trying moments with the aroused hill-billies. Running time, 18 minutes.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Seven Films Start

As seven pictures started in the week, top honors for new activity went to Twentieth Century-Fox which started four productions. Radio, Grand National (Hirliman Production) and Republic started one each in the same period six pictures were finished. MGM is credited with three, and Warner, Republic and Universal with one each.

At least two of the new Twentieth Century-Fox batch seem to be of the quality in cast assignments and story content that promise to establish them as big picture attractions. The one which probably will receive most advance attention and publicity is "Wake Up And Live." It features Walter Winchell, newspaper columnist, and Ben Bernie, radio artist, and also will present Alice Faye, Grace Bradley, Ned Sparks, Jack Haley, Patsy Kelly, Miles Mander, Douglas Fowley and Walter Catlett. Sidney Lanfield is directing.

Rivalling this first picture for prominence, particularly from a name value standpoint, is "Cafe Metropole," which E. H. Griffith is directing. Loretta Young and Tyrone Power are starred, supported by Jean Hersholt, Adolphe Menjou, Gregory Ratoff, Bill Robinson and Helen Westley.

"That I May Live," has Rochelle Hudson, Robert Kent, J. Edward Bromberg and William Pawley in the principal roles. Additions are to be made. Direction is by Alan Dwan.

The fourth picture, "Dead Yesterday," will present Sally Blane, Thomas Beck, Sigfried Rumann, Wade Boteler, Jane Darwell, Joan Davis and William Demarest. James Tinling is directing.

Others Started

Radio started "Wings of Mercy." John Beal and Jane Walsh, a newcomer, are featured. Important supporting players listed are Philip Huston, Frank M. Thomas, Alec Craig, Joan Fontaine, Diana Gibson, George Irving, Billy Gilbert and James Conlon. Lew Landers is directing.

Maintaining its regular schedule, Republic started "Ever Since Adam." A comedy romance, it will present Patricia Ellis, Lyle Talbot, Nat Pendleton, Jack LaRue, George Meeker, Pierre Watkin, Paul Stanton, Helene Mitchell and Carleton Young. William High is directing.

The final production in the newly started group is "Gold," a George Hirliman production for Grand National. Conrad Nagel is the star. Louis Gasnier directs.

Completed

Of the three MGM completed pictures, "Pick a Star," a Hal Roach production, features Jack Haley, Mischa Auer, Patsy Kelly, Lyda Roberti, Rosina Laurence, Felix Knight, Russell Hicks, Spencer Charters and Our Gang. Edward Sedgwick directed.

At the home lot, "Mama Steps Out," final title for "Burnt Fingers," was finished. It features Alice Brady, Guy Kibbee, Betty Furness, Stanley Morner, Gregory Gaye, Gene Lockhart, Ivan Lebedeff, Edward Norris, Heather Thatcher, Mitchell Lewis, Anna Demetrio and Frank Puglia. George B. Seitz directed.

The third film, "Dangerous Number," given a quick preview, features Robert Young, Ann Sothern, Reginald Owen, Cora Witherspoon, Barnett Parker, Dean Jagger, Maria Shelton and Vance Dillman. Richard Thorpe directed.

ANOTHER LITTLE JOB FOR THE UNDERTAKER

Once upon a time Yale had a song threatening "another little job for the undertaker, a little more work for the casket maker" to its football opponents. Twentieth Century - Fox makes moving pictures, doesn't play football, but from the sound of three titles on the current production schedule, picture exploiters will have plenty of opportunity to make cooperative advertising publicity contacts with gentlemen of the undertaking and casket making trade.

"Dead Yesterday" looks like a cinch title to arouse their professional and business instincts, and they'll probably be around quickly on that one. Maybe when they hear a ghostly voice murmuring "That I May Live," their ardor will cool off a bit. The third, a voice commanding "Wake Up and Live", most likely will set them to picking up their traps and trudging back to their mortuaries, disappointed, as they realize it was only a false alarm.

Warner finished "Slim." A drama, it features Henry Fonda and Pat O'Brien with Margaret Lindsay, Stuart Erwin, J. Farrell MacDonald, John Litel, Dick Purcell, Joseph Sawyer, James Robbins and Carlyle Moore, Jr. Ray Enright directed.

"Paradise Express" was completed at Republic. The cast lists Grant Withers, Dorothy Appleby, Maude Eburne, Harry Davenport, Donald Kirke, Arthur Loft, Lew Kelly, Anthony Pawley, Fern Emmett, John Holland, Bob McClung, Bruce Mitchell, Guy Wilkerson, George Cleveland and Ralph McCullough. Joseph Kane directed.

The title changed from "Person to Person Call" to "Girl Overboard," Universal finished its regular weekly feature. The cast includes Gloria Stuart, Walter Pidgeon, Billy Burrud, Hobart Cavanaugh, Sidney Blackmer, Michael Fitzmaurice and Gerald Oliver Smith. Sidney Salkow directed.

Fewer "B" Films

In Hollywood to attend Adolph Zukor's silver jubilee, a celebration they enjoyed, Paramount's theatre partners had other fish to fry. Invited to sit in on a product conference, more or less as observers, E. V. Richards, New Orleans; Sam Pinanski and Martin J. Mullen, Boston; Robert O'Donnel and Karl Hoblitzelle, Dallas; J. J. Fitzgibbons, Toronto; Frank Walker, New York; M. A. Schlesinger, Johannesburg, South Africa; A. H. Blank, Des Moines; Sam Goldstein, Springfield, Mass. and M. A. Lightman, Memphis, first listened as production plans for the remainder of the season were outlined, then began to ask questions, make observations, and finally came out with suggestions that were in fact, orders.

The first subject of the exhibitors' fire were B pictures. Unanimously pointing out that this grade of pictures were liabilities more often than assets, and backing their arguments with facts and figures, the first concession drawn from the production chieftains was an agreement that the number of B pictures immediately would be cut down by 25 per cent, and their quality improved, with better stories, stronger casts, larger budget allotments. The scheduled 24 B pictures were reduced to 18.

With this major victory dangling from their belts, the exhibitor partners did not elect to rest. Told that the public wants more music in pictures, production announced that it was ready to meet this demand with five musicals ready for release in the late winter and early spring months. More are to come.

Exhibitor Scouts

Taking up the matter of development of new names, with a view to strengthening the company's star roster, the exhibitors were agreeably surprised to find that they had been elevated to the status of talent scouts assigned to the duty of shipping to the studio any promising talent they might discover in their own localities.

Familiar with the speed and completeness with which public tastes shift and change, an intelligence that often takes months to reach Hollywood, the theatre partners impressed upon production the necessity of being consulted when future programs are being mapped. The exhibitors were assured that production would increasingly rely on their judgment and opinions. It was acknowledged that the following of this procedure would enable the producers to gain knowledge and information that would be of inestimable value.

No "Fake" Here

Action in a sequence of "The Last Slaver" called for Wallace Beery to hit little Mickey Rooney in the jaw. Said director Tay Garnett, "When you hit him, Wally, I want you to let go a healthy wallop."

"Aw, I don't want to hurt the kid," countered Beery.

"Go ahead," chirped Mickey, "I can take it."

"Action!" yelled Garnett.

Down comes Beery's powerful arm. There's a staccato crack, and heels over head Mickey Rooney goes flying across the stage to wind up against a wall twenty feet away.

The cameras grind on. Rooney staggers up, his mouth bleeding.

"Cut!" yells Garnett.

"That's a one shot take," says Beery.

"Okay," from Garnett.

"You said it," courageously from Mickey. "I've got to take another wallop from Baxter in a couple of days, but I guess I showed you guys I could take it."

Not all screen brawls are faked.

AN APPEAL TO SHOWMEN

by HARLAND RANKIN, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont.

IN WHICH AN EXHIBITOR POSES SOME QUESTIONS

To the Editor of the Herald:

During my two years experience in theatre business, I have encountered a few problems that I have not as yet been able to solve clearly, or definitely.

The first of these is complete service deals. What is your opinion of these? Are they practical for three changes a week? Some exhibitors claim they are. Travelers and neighboring exhibitors shake their heads, claiming you take up too much of your playing time, forcing yourself to pass up a lot of money makers. The first year we used a complete service, saving 10% on our year's film bill. Last year we bought from the major companies, averaging 25% of their product on selective deals, which in our opinion is the better buying, although we showed increased business at the end of our fiscal year. We had increased film rentals, which gave us a 3% decrease on our net. This may have been due to our extreme cold period last winter. Now the question arises, would we not have been ahead if we had bought a complete service, one-third of our playing time, and leaving two-thirds of the time for the other major companies? If in our situation business remained the same with a service, we would have enjoyed a 25% increase on our net earnings. In small towns where major product is bought I feel that a service might be profitable, as three changes never do capacity business. You have as a rule average business the first part of the week, with sell-out business on your week end. I would appreciate opinions from other owners in small towns.

The second question I would like to know the answer to is: On what basis should pictures be bought? We all know that pictures are bought as cheaply as they can, with exchanges out for increases. From the theatre standpoint what should one pay, or what percentage of his gross should be used for film rental? This is a question that I have failed to get an intelligent answer on in Canada. I have my own opinion on the matter but they all tell me to "buy the best you can."

Another question I would like answered it, what percentage of the town's business in the surrounding country should go to your theatre, in order to get the maximum out of your situation? If you cannot compare a town of similar size, one having thriving industries, the other with 50% relief. What is considered average business?

Hoping I am not taking too much space in your magazine and would appreciate hearing from my fellow exhibitors.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

FIVE-AND-DIME SHOW ON THEATRE'S 28TH YEAR

To the Editor of the Herald:

The Bijou Theatre on January 30 will close its twenty-eighth year of continuous running, the first motion picture showhouse in South Dakota still operating, with the same manager and the same operator that opened January 30, 1908. This of itself is something outstanding, I know not equaled anywhere in the northwest, and I doubt whether anywhere in the country.

This year we are considering running a five and ten cent show for January 29 and 30, in celebration of that event.

The writer has always represented the moving picture industry in legislative sessions, and fifteen years ago succeeded in defeating both censorship and Sunday closing law, although both of them passed both houses by a two-thirds vote. But by means of parliamentary tactics, reconsideration and otherwise, we beat the bills.

Having operated shows from the days of one-reelers when Carl Laemmle was advertising with 6 x 9 heralds, and our pictures came from Pittsburgh Calcium Light Company, we just want to do something different for this anniversary, and a five and ten cent show during the legislative session may be of interest to a lot of people who were not born for several years after our house opened.

THE STORIES TOLD BY THE BOX OFFICE

To the Editor of the Herald:

Shirley Temple is a prime favorite and people come to our theatre that never pretend to go at any other time. I wish to say also that our dear departed Will Rogers still draws a large crowd, equal to the crowds that came to see him before his most untimely death.

And now the passing of the renowned Arthur Brisbane, who had become a household word to quote from, is going to leave a void not to be filled easily.—Mrs. D. J. Mooney, Princess Theatre, Ordway, Cal.

Here's Story of Circuit Bookers Missing a Bet

Last May "Cloistered," a French production faithfully portraying the every day life of Catholic nuns in a cloistered convent, opened simultaneously in art theatres in New York and Boston. Trade opinion, expressed in the first reviews, that the picture was movingly beautiful but was not of a commercial nature and would appeal only to limited audiences, was reflected by independent and circuit bookers who took the attitude that the picture was not for general distribution. Today the film has been booked by RKO for 20 of its metropolitan houses, and by the Fabian, Schine and Rose circuits, and others.

The story of the sale of the film to large circuits is as unusual as the history of the picture.

Six years ago while on a holiday, Robert Alexandre of Pathe Cinema de France, who had interested himself in amateur film-making, shot a record of routine life in a Trappist monastery in France. Friends who saw the picture encouraged him and he devoted his next vacation to recording the history of the Polish Corridor. This was released in Europe and scored a great success.

Then M. Alexandre determined to try the impossible; to film the life of sisters in a cloistered convent where no outsider may enter. After protracted negotiations, involving some 50 visits to Vatican City, the producer obtained permission from Pope Pius XI.

With a crew of 15 men, M. Alexandre set up cameras in the mother house of the Sisters of Our Lady of Charity of the Good Shepherd at Angers. Never posing or attempting to direct the 1,000 members of the community, he took occasional shots for two years. The result was the present production which runs for 65 minutes. The prints distributed in America have English dialogue dubbed in by I. E. Lopert, formerly connected with Paramount Products in Paris, and with a running narrative by the Rev. Matthew Kelly of the Church of the Little Flower, Sunnyside, Queens.

Huisman Acquires Rights

Rene Huisman, president of Best Film Company of New York, acquired the American rights for the picture for a reported $3,000 and last May it opened at the 55th Street Playhouse, New York, and the Filmarte theatre, Boston. After runs of more than 10 weeks at both these houses, during which the picture grossed approximately 200 per cent compared with the average house receipts, Mr. Huisman took the film to large circuit bookers, using as one of his selling points that reliable estimates were that more than 60 per cent of the audiences at the Boston and New York showings were non-Catholic. The bookers flatly refused to handle the production on the ground that no matter how great its artistic appeal it could be sold only to a restricted class audience.

Enthusiastic reviews in the lay press, praising the picture for its simplicity, beauty and photography, and even more enthusiastic recommendations only served to emphasize trade belief that the film had no general appeal.

From these efforts the distributor turned to booking the production into church auditoriums. He made arrangements with two large Catholic parishes in Manhattan and Brooklyn for 15 day showings with a percentage of the receipts to go to charity. His own figures show that the attendance for each of these runs was approximately 60,000 and the gross receipts for each auditorium better than $35,000.

Then to Roadshows

Unable to sell the picture to a circuit Mr. Huisman turned to roadshowings. In Elizabeth, N. J., with the cooperation of a parish priest he leased the State theatre, a small neighborhood house about three miles from the business district. In three days the picture grossed $1,560, about 400 per cent over normal. A similar lease in Rochester, N. Y. grossed 220 per cent. In Yonkers, N. Y., where a major circuit had offered $37 for a three day run in their house, Mr. Huisman leased an unsuccessful opposition house for $300 and grossed $1,000 a day for three days, in contrast to an estimated $700 a day for the circuit theatre.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Time Out for Romance

(Twentieth Century-Fox)

Comedy-Melodrama

Being spun out of those elements calculated to give the maximum amount of entertainment to the largest number of persons, the story told in this production is timely and different. Basically a comedy melodrama, it will run the range of romance, drama, thrill action and surprise. The principal background is a motor cavalcade bound from Detroit to the Pacific Coast. A young car driver gets mixed up with a girl who ran away from a loveless marriage for romance, a gangster jewel thief accounts for the drama as he menaces the heiress. An odd collection of other folk, varying from a team of at-liberty vaudeville actors to an assortment of comical family types, out for the ride, provide the comedy. Thrill action results from what happens to the cavalcade. The action, drama, mystery, comedy and excitement appears along the highways and byways, aboard a swanky yacht, in hotels, auto camps and jails.

Claire Trevor and Michael Whelan, recently teamed in "Sing, Baby, Sing" and "Career Woman," are the leads. The heavy, Douglas Fowley," was seen in "Big Brown Eyes," "Private Number," "Dimples" and "Sing, Baby, Sing." The vaudeville actors are Joan Bennett, featured in "The Holy Terror," and Chick Chandler, seen recently in "15 Maiden Lane" and "Star for a Night." Other players are Bennie Bartlett, Andrew Tombes, William Demarest, Lelah Tyler, William Griffity, Paul Stanton, Vernon Steele, Georgia Caine, Edward Keane and Inez Courtney.

The screen play is by Lou Breslow, credited with participation in "15 Maiden Lane" and "36 Hours to Kill," and John Patrick, his collaborator on those stories. The original is by Eleanore Griffith and William Rankin. Rankin wrote the screen play for "Pennies from Heaven." Direction is by Malcolm St. Clair, who did "Crack Up."

Paradise Express

(Republic)

Drama

With a sufficiency of romance to make the story interesting to all, this production tells how the management of a jerkwater railroad meets and overcomes the menace of motor truck business competition. Primarily a thrill action feature, it combines those elements of intrigue, skullduggery and double crossing, with the hero practically always in great personal danger, that have such a quick appeal to average audiences.

Adapted from an original story by Allan Vaughn Elston and Paul Perez, for which Jack Natteford and Betty Burbridge prepared the screen play, the film is being directed by Joseph Kane. Kane's recent credits include two numbers in the "Three Mesquiteers" series and several outdoor action adventure pictures produced by this company.

As an element of conflict emphasises both the romantic and dramatic phases of the story, exciting thrill action is the motivating medium. For the most part much of the action is devoted to illustrations of retaliations which the railroad practises on the trucking company for depredations committed, and vice versa. Building to a climax in which it is to be decided to which medium of transport the shippers will give their business, an exciting train-truck fleet race is staged, with the railroad overcoming many handicaps to emerge the winner. Naturally the victory busts up the plot of the truck company and resolves the romance favorably for the hero and girl in the case.

Man of the People

(MGM)

Drama

From the time of their first appearance on the legitimate stage and later in films, political dramas provoked a keen public interest that gave such stories unquestioned commercial value. Political drama is the substance of "Man of the People." It tells the story of a young man of foreign birth, a child of the slums, who, from the moment he receives his bar certificate, dedicates his efforts to procuring justice for persons of his own origin and social status.

The leading role seems to be ideally fitted to Joseph Calleia, heretofore featured in grim public enemy characters. Having demonstrated many times his ability to handle tensely dramatic roles, it can be anticipated that Calleia will be a revelation, as this time he is on the side of the law instead of in conflict with it. Though his part practically dominates the story, the supporting cast seems to have been given more than usual attention. As principals the film will feature Florence Rice, about whom the dramatic romance rotates; Thomas Mitchell, the boss, Ted Healy, Catherine Doucet, Jonathan Hale and Paul Stanton. Minor players, all of whom are effective factors in the drama, include Robert Emmett Keane, Jane Barns, William Ricciardi, Noel Madison, Edward Nugent and Donald Briggs.

The production is based on an original story by Frank Dolan. Edwin L. Marin is directing and Lucien Hubbard is the producer.

Two Wise Maids

(Republic)

Comedy-Drama

For years producers have been looking around for suitable stories to glorify the old fashioned American school marm. Two reasons spurred the search; a realization that the entertainment delivered would have wide topical appeal, and a belief that the subject would lend itself readily to commercial exploitation and contacts. In "Two Wise Maids" Republic believes it has that kind of a property.

With Alison Skipworth in the title role, the story heroizes an old fashioned school teacher. It is being developed in a manner calculated to concentrate sympathy on her and to stimulate in the minds of audiences those sentiments which are pretty common at the stage in life when they can look back to their public school days and be reminded that the old teacher wasn't such a horrible creature after all. In the early part of the yarn, the mechanics are so directed as to make things look bad for the teacher, and it seems that nothing but dismissal is in store for her.

The production is based on an original story by Endre Bohem, with screen play by Sam Ornitz. Direction is by Phil Rosen.

As Miss Skipworth is starred, the support includes Polly Moran, returning to the screen after a long absence; Hope Manning and Donald Cook, about whom the romance rotates; Jackie Searl and Marcia Mae Jones, two pupils who are the central figures in the dramatic crisis in Skipworth's career. In character and atmospheric roles will be seen Lila Lee, Luis Alberni, Maxie Rosenbloom, Harry Burns, Clarence Wilson, Selmar Jackson, John Hamilton, Theresa Conover, Raymond Brown, James C. Morton, Stanley Blystone and Bob McClung.

Release date, February 1.

Love Begins

(Tentative Title)

(Warner)

Dramatic Romance

This production looms as of more than ordinary interest for two reasons. Of the substance that has made many pictures highly popular, it tells a dramatic story of young love. In this story, to give it an especial appeal to feminine patronage, it heroizes a young girl who goes through life, until she finds happiness, with all the cards stacked against her. In the second place, it will serve to introduce a highly promising screen personality in the leading role. She is Mary McGuire, a 17-year-old Australian girl, who has had considerable screen experience in the "down-under" continent but is brand new to American audiences.

The heroine, first presented as a jobless waif, is sheltered in a swank apartment house by an elevator boy. As the youthful friendship ripens into idyllic love, the girl is given a maid's job where she becomes a favorite with a whimsical, typsy art collector, but is looked upon menacingly by a furtive tenant. Terrified as she accidentally breaks a supposedly valuable vase, the girl, who bravely has striven to hide some fearful secret, runs away. Found after an intensive citywide search by the elevator boy, the starving girl and her baby are returned to the apartment house where events transpire in dramatic fashion to remove all menaces to the girl and her baby and bring happiness to her and the boy.

Based on an original by Ida A. R. Wylie, the screen play is by Lillie Hayward, who has been a long time associate in preparing woman appeal stories for this company. Direction is by Louis King, credited with "Melody for Two."

The cast supporting Miss McGuire lists Tom Brown as the elevator boy, Hugh Herbert as the collector and Joseph King as the menace. It also includes Arthur Aylesworth, Teddy Hart, seen in "Three Men on a Horse" and as the shyster lawyer in "After the Thin Man," and Dorothy Vaughan.

CONGRESS TURNING TO "MONOPOLIES" IN RADIO

House Resolution Calls for Inquiry; Senator Wheeler Asks Commission for Data

Radio will be the object of early attention from the new Congress. Following a request by Chairman Burton K. Wheeler of the Senate Interstate Commerce Commission for information on operation of large broadcasting companies, Representative Connery of Massachusetts introduced a resolution in the House asking an investigation of what is claimed to be a radio monopoly. Possibilities of accommodating as many as 500 additional broadcasting stations on frequencies between 1,510 and 1,600 kilocycles were called to the attention of the Federal Communications Commission in a report of the engineering division.

Explaining his resolution, similar to one he pressed unsuccessfully last year, Mr. Connery expressed the belief that "it would be in the public interest that a thorough and exhaustive investigation be made of the entire radio monopoly situation."

Hundreds of complaints, he said, have come to him in the past year from all over the country "showing that without doubt the monopoly exists," and he has received numerous requests that something be done to remedy the situation.

In his request to the Federal Communications Commission for information on large broadcasting companies Senator Wheeler said he opposed what he termed "chain radio companies" on the ground that they threatened a monopoly of radio channels. He also expressed opposition to ownership of stations by newspapers.

Would Realign Stations

The gradual realignment of broadcasting stations proposed in the engineering division report to the FCC would provide for a number of Class A stations, similar to the present clear channel stations, operating on a power of not less than 50,000 watts; Class B stations, to give rural coverage, using from 10,000 to 50,000 watts; Class C stations, similar to the present high power regional stations, using from 5,000 to 50,000 watts; Class D stations, for metropolitan service, using 1,000 to 5,000 watts; Class E stations, for city coverage, from 500 to 1,000 watts, and Class F stations, for local coverage, using from 100 to 250 watts.

There would be not less than 25 Class A channels, approximately five for Class B, 14 for C, 30 for D, 10 for E and six for F.

See More Stations

Foreseeing the opening up to general broadcasting of the frequencies from 1,510 to 1,600 kilocycles, now reserved for experimental operations, the engineering department indicated possibilities of accommodating a large number of stations. By proper geographical spacing, the report explained, these frequencies could accommodate 40 Class D stations on 5,000 watts, 60 using 1,000 watts in Class D, and 200 using the same maximum in Class E, 300 using 500 watts, 400 using 250 watts or 500 using 100 watts.

A chain of non-commercial radio stations to broadcast cultural topics and events was envisioned by Mayor Fiorella H. LaGuardia of New York at a meeting of the Municipal Art Committee this week. The chain would have WNYC, the New York municipal station, as a link. Facilities of the station will soon be increased with a new broadcasting plant in Greenpoint, Brooklyn, the Mayor said.

Representative Celler of New York has announced his intention to introduce a bill to appropriate $750,000 for the construction of a Government short wave station as part of a move to safeguard the high frequency channels allocated for use by the Government.

Fear Foreign Seizure

Fears have been expressed by members of the FCC and others interested that if use is not made of these frequencies they may be thrown back into the international pool and seized by some other country. To prevent this, both the National and Columbia Broadcasting Companies have expressed their willingness to use one of the frequencies.

Their offers brought a statement from Commissioner George H. Payne of the FCC that a vicious radio lobby" has nullified all efforts of the Government to build a station and is endeavoring to obtain the frequencies for commercial exploitation.

$11,419,143 Broadcast Revenue

Figures made public by the National Association of Broadcasters this week showed that broadcasting station advertising revenue in November amounted to $11,419,143, a decline of less than one per cent from the record figure achieved in October. The November business brought the total for 11 months in 1936 to $96,503,945.

The association's record showed that advertising on national networks totaled $6,149,818 in November against $6,722,926 the preceding month; regional networks, $122,725 against $154,979; national non-network, $2,873,200 against $2,401,800, and local, $2,273,400 against $2,234,800. Radio advertising of the amusement industries totaled $45,880, of which $31,760 was spent with local stations and $14,120 with national non-network stations.

The food industry was the heaviest advertiser, followed by toilet goods, drugs and pharmaceuticals and automobiles.

NBC's revenue for December, 1936, was 23 per cent above the same period in 1935, making it the highest December in the 10-year history of the company and enabling NBC to close the year with a total of $34,523,950, its greatest year. This total is 10.8 per cent higher than 1935's total.

The total for the Red network in December was $2,418,713, while the Blue network total was $1,139,877.

A resolution that the Actors Equity Association organize radio performers was adopted at the January meeting of the association and will be referred to the Equity Council for action.

"Free Speech" Drive

A new drive for "free speech" on the radio is expected to be made in the current session of Congress by the socalled "civil liberty" group, whose bills to amend the communications act of 1934 have been introduced in the House by Representative Scott of California.

It is particularly specified that neither the Government nor the broadcaster shall have any power of censorship of any kind, that no broadcaster shall be subject to either civil or criminal liability in any court for material broadcast during the mandatory period, and that no license shall be revoked or renewal refused because of material so broadcast.

Companies Launch Mid-Winter Sales Drives and Tours

Most of the major companies have either completed plans or have launched mid-winter sales campaigns and many sales executives are on tours of their exchanges in intensive efforts to bring the selling season to a close with new records.

For the first time in its history United Artists will conduct a national sales drive. The campaign, which will be conducted under the leadership of Andy Smith, general sales manager, will be called the "George J. Schaefer Sales Drive" and will run for 14 weeks from January 24th to May 1st. Salesmen, branch managers, district managers and division managers will compete for a number of cash prizes and other awards.

John D. Clark, general sales manager for Twentieth Century-Fox, has set February 4th and 5th for the annual district managers convention at the Muelbach hotel, Kansas City, which this year will feature the "Sidney R. Kent Drive."

Mr. Clark left by plane this week for the coast to confer with Darryl Zanuck on production and new pictures which will be discussed at the two day session.

Two foreign sales conventions will be held by Twentieth Century-Fox starting April 28th. The first will be held in Paris from April 28th to May 1st and the second will take place in London, starting May 3rd.

Columbia's "Montague Sweepstakes Drive" was inaugurated last week with a telephone conference. Abe Montague, general sales manager, and Joseph A. McConville and Rube Jackter, his assistants, addressed the sales forces in 31 Columbia exchanges from the home office.

The RKO home office sales staff is busy with plans for winter sales. Harry Michaelson, short subject sales manager, E. L. McEvoy, eastern sales manager, and Nat Levy, east central district manager, have left the home office for a two weeks trip to the offices of the eastern division for sales conferences with managers and salesmen of Albany, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Washington.

Arthur A. Lee, head of GB, has announced an intensive playdate drive, to start immediately and to run to April 3rd. The campaign will be called the "George W. Weeks Playdate Roundup." Ken Hodkinson, home office sales representative, has left for a tour of exchanges including St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City and San Francisco.

Edward J. Peskay, vice-president in charge of distribution of Grand National, left this week for a tour of exchanges. He will outline production plans and policy at meetings with district managers.

Gradwell L. Sears, vice-president and general sales manager of Warner Brothers, went to New Orleans to confer with major circuit heads in the south on impending production from his company.

American Telephone Has Net of $9.36 a Share

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company this week reported a net income of $174,715,000 for the 12 months ended December 31, 1936, compared with a net of $125,806,504 for the preceding year. Earnings last year were equal to $9.36 a common share, compared with $6.74 a share in 1935. Earnings for 1936 marked the first time since 1930 that the company earned its $9 dividend.

FROM CANNED BEANS TO LAXATIVES

Fleischmann's Yeast, Feenamint Laxative, and whatnot.

Time Magazine, Inc., is the only paying advertiser on the air promoting the business of a motion picture—The March of Time, newsreel magazine releasing through RKO. The Capitol theatre, on Broadway, and Radio City's Music Hall are the only two theatres broadcasting on a national network regularly in the interests of the motion picture box office.

One of the oldest programs on the airwaves, the weekly broadcasts from the Capitol theatre, began in November, 1922—two years after the birth of commercial broadcasting. It was the first radio program to come from any motion picture theatre. Major Edward Bowes stepped into the picture in July, 1925, created what has since become known the country over as the Capitol "Family," and has reached millions of Sunday listeners ever since.

Radio has had the benefit of the audience appeal of all except Shirley Temple of the Ten Biggest money makers of 1936. Clark Gable, acclaimed the second best motion picture box office bet, has made two guest air appearances; Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, in third place, as a team, have had, in the case of Mr. Astaire, one guest and one series program appearance, and Miss Rogers, two guest appearances; Robert Taylor has appeared six times as air guest in six months; Joe E. Brown, twice; Dick Powell, once as a guest and again in a series of programs; Joan Crawford, three guest appearances, likewise Claudette Colbert, and Jeanette MacDonald and Gary Cooper, ranking ninth and tenth in the HERALD's box office poll, each appeared on the air once.

Hollywood's producers likewise have used all but one—Jessica Dragonette—of the Ten Champions of radio, determined in a nationwide poll conducted by ballot among all radio editors by Jack Banner, radio editor of Motion Picture Daily. The nine used in the order of their standing in the Daily's poll, are follows: Jack Benny, Fred Allen, Rudy Vallee, Helen Hayes, Eddie Cantor, Bob Burns, Fred Astaire, Lanny Ross and Nelson Eddy.

Charged against the foregoing large users of screen talent are substantial sums of radio advertisers' air budget. Some 15 National Broadcasting clients spent $16,017,206 with the RCA subsidiary for all air advertising for the first 11 months of 1936. Combined, these 15 advertisers have accounted for 51.78 per cent of the $30,935,248 thus far expended at NBC. Every one of the group at one time or another has used motion picture personalities on its programs, several of them, including Standard Brands, Shell Eastern Petroleum, Bristol-Myers, General Foods and Sterling Products being the principal employers of film players. The 15 largest spenders for advertising on National Broadcasting's networks in the 11 months to December 1st were as follows, with name of client, agency, and time expenditures:

There were additionally 71 different programs using either straight-film, film-radio or film-stage players during the six months, making a total of 96 programs. Typical of programs using less than five players were Feenamint Laxative's "Amateur Hour," Campana Skin Balm's "First Nighter," Bourjois Cosmetic's "Evening in Paris," the Pet Milk Company's "Saturday Night Serenaders," Vick's Vapo-Rub's "Open House," Wrigley Chewing Gum's "Poetic-Melodies," General Shoe's "Portraits of Harmony," Standard Oil's "Flying Red Horse Tavern," Colgate Soap's "Ziegfeld Follies of the Air," Iodent Toothpaste's "Dress Rehearsal," Heinz Pickles' "Magazine of the Air," Swift Ham's "Studio Party," and Radio City's "Music Hall on the Air"—one of the three lone programs specifically selling motion pictures. The radio industry, as represented by the two greatest networks, National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System, today are expressing their claims on Hollywood's motion picture talent in the permanent terms of brick and mortar. Both are investing upwards of $1,000,000 each in the building of their largest broadcasting centers outside of their main air plants in New York. Too, room is being provided within the buildings with a view to television, in which venture radio will depend almost entirely on the motion picture's talent supply.

Greater expansion of NBC on the Pacific Coast and fuller service to listeners is forecast in contemplated changes in San Francisco and Hollywood, which were announced this week by Lenox R. Lohr, President of the National Broadcasting Company. One of the factors in the proposed changes, Mr. Lohr declared, is the rapidly increasing number of programs on both networks for coast-to-coast release and the ever-growing hold of Hollywood on the public's interest, as a source for broadcast material and talent. The Hollywood studio facilities and staff will be doubled, he said.

Ford and General Mills Projects

Already the broadcasters and their advertisers are looking for additional ways and means further to appropriate Hollywood's talent, the latest ambitions being those of Ford Motors and General Mills Flour to buy exclusive rights to the complete player roster of an entire production corporation.

Another link was forged when Chevrolet Motor Company boldly offered motion pictures, free to the public, at its broadcasting shows. The "Chevrolet Hour" on November 8th, in New York, finished its regular Sunday evening air performance and then proceeded to run off motion pictures for thirty minutes. Ninety per cent of the films unreeled pointed to show that Chevrolet motor cars are sturdy automobiles—but when their projection was completed more than half the audience had gone home.

The next move is the "electrical transcription," bringing motion picture stars to the smaller networks and individual stations. The programs are sponsored by an advertiser.

The basic idea itself is not new, but its relation to Hollywood is. Already deeply engaged is the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Coal Company, through a series of programs on Mutual Broadcasting System. Film's Jackie Cooper is master-of-ceremonies of D. L. and W.'s "Lessons from Hollywood," which already has introduced 23 of Hollywood's well-known players, among them: Leo Carrillo, Dolores Costello, Betty Grable, Patsy Kelly, Guy Kibbee, Elissa Landi, Bela Lugosi, Paul Lukas, Polly Moran, Chester Morris, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lyda Roberti, Ann Shirley.

Typical of the circulation for electrical transcriptions—a term used to take away some of the stigma of recordings—is the 300-station usage given Dave Rubinoff's orchestra. Too, Ed Wynn's series is to be "waxed"—for Spuds Cigarettes, and issued to several hundreds of small stations. Raleigh and Kool Cigarettes, featuring Jack Pearl, will electrically transcribe its NBC "Blue Network" program for 18 smaller stations.

Radio-Film Service

Signs of the times were seen in the extension of Fanchon and Marco's talent business from stage bookings to include a service for radio advertisers seeking talent especially for electrical transcriptions. For this purpose the agency signed 14 Hollywood players for recordings on the air, as follows: Fred and Paula Stone, Lyda Roberti, Jackie Coogan, Betty Grable, Jack Holt, May Robson, Ann Sothern, Patsy Kelly, Dolores Costello, Ann Shirley, Guy Kibbee, Maureen O'Sullivan and Gloria Swanson.

Bethlehem Steel Corporation, General Motors, Woodbury's Soap, Ralston-Purina Company, Sterling Products, Westinghouse, Dr. Miles Laboratories and American Bosch are new clients for electrical transcription service. Very Hollywood-minded are Woodbury's Soap, Ralston Purina, Sterling Products and Dr. Miles Laboratories.

Hollywood now is not only giving radio a full complement of quality talent but also is answering the broadcasters' prayers for literary material—the story-well of radio showing signs of drying. And thus is explained, partially, at least, the large number of dramatic playlets now on the air with film players.

Generally the radio advertisers compensate the film stars in proportion to their average scale of payments under their film contract. Air payments go from $350 to $5,000 per guest appearance, but the average payment for the screen "top-liner" is $3,500, for a few minutes on the air.

Many stars have appeared as "guest" performers on the air without any charge to the advertiser or broadcaster. On the Lux Toilet Soap Radio Theatre conducted by Cecil Blount DeMille, Paramount director, most of the players now appear gratis. But "a little token" of $350 to $500 is usually made by Mr. DeMille's sponsors.

The Hollywood motion picture talent market for radio has something of a scale of prices for various classes of players, from $350 up. For instance, the "asking" price for a single radio performance is $3,500 for Joan Crawford, Claudette Colbert, Jeanette MacDonald, Lily Pons, Frances Langford and Ginger Rogers. About $2,500 is asked for Jack Oakie, Lionel Barrymore, George Raft, Edward Arnold and Herbert Marshall. Ann Sothern, Alice Faye and Zasu Pitts may be had for $1,500, while Joel McCrea, Jane Withers, Edmund Lowe, Pat O'Brien, Barbara Stanwyck, Fred MacMurray and Victor McLaglen demand $1,000 per air show.

Such stars as Grace Moore, John Barrymore and Fredric March demand much higher fees.

Acquisition of Hollywood stars for the air has been estimated to have added ten per cent to the cost of radio talent, bringing the talent charges for the average national-networks program to 40 per cent of the program's production costs—the bill for effecting the mechanical national hookup taking the rest of the investment.

The producers established a "secret" committee of production experts on the Coast, recruiting them from members' studios, to observe the stars' radio activities. It is supposed to "regulate" them, but to date there has been no outward manifestation of any such curtailment.

As for the controversy raging in the motion picture business over the appearances of Hollywood's stars on the air, grosses fail to indicate any loss in revenue, for theatres as a whole are making more money today, consistently, than since the dark days of 1929-30 and subsequently.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in September launched a survey to determine whether box office income was or is being injured. To date the surveyors have been unable to draw any conclusions.

Among development is the exhibitors' realization that radio has some value in theatre advertising and exploitation. MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in its issue of December 26th, reported a marked trend in exhibition in the use of radio exploitation. Many local stations are carrying spot announcements and plugs for current attractions at the local theatres, and in many situations theatre owners are sponsoring weekly or daily programs.

National Broadcasting and Columbia Broadcasting are running neck-and-neck in the race to Hollywood's talent roster, as evidenced by the following compilation covering the period of motion picture players' performances between July 1st and December 31st:

Networks	Number of Guest Performances	Percentage
National Broadcasting	279	46%
Columbia Broadcasting	262	43
Mutual Broadcasting	38	6
Others (Including Individual Stations	28	5
	607	100%

The two large systems, too, are building up closely in competition as national broadcasters, NBC now broadcasting through 110 stations, Columbia through 102, while radio's newest national system—Mutual-Don Lee enters the new year with 39 outlets.

New executive offices will be erected immediately to house production, scenario, legal, advertising and publicity staffs as well as western sales representatives.

Meanwhile, it was announced in New York that the company will distribute the English pictures, "Scotland Yard Commands," produced by Associated British Film Distributors, and "Mr. Bliss," produced by Garret Clements, with the current season's list of product.

Kirk W. Todd of the Pittsburgh investment banking firm of K. W. Todd Company, chairman of the board of Central Ohio Steel Products, and the Jeannette Glass Company, has been elected a director of Grand National, to represent a group of bankers and investors who have acquired a block of Grand National stock, including the holdings of Pathe Film Corporation. Mr. Todd takes the place on the board previously held by Robert W. Atkins of Abbott, Proctor and Paine, a representative of the Pathe interests.

U.S. Films Retain Lead in China

Notwithstanding intensified efforts on the part of European motion picture distibutors to improve their position in China, American films have continued to dominate that market, according to a report to the United States Department of Commerce from its Shanghai office.

In contrast to the gain made by American pictures, British production has lost considerable ground in China and attempts to popularize British pictures have, in general, been unsuccessful, the report continues.

Approximately 65 feature sound films and 16 silent films were produced in Shanghai and Canton studios during 1935, according to the report. Although figures for 1936 are not yet available, it is estimated that production showed an increase.

Bueno Increasing Production

Jose Luis Bueno, one of Mexico's most active producers, has returned to Mexico City after a two-month trip that took him to New York, South America and Cuba, and has announced he will increase his production schedule from four to six pictures during the coming year. Contracts signed in New York, he said, assure him of world distribution and enable him to increase his schedule.

Federal Court Delays Hearing On RKO Finance

The hearing on the reorganization plan for RKO has been adjourned by Federal Judge William Bondy until February 18th. The court declined to permit Edward J. Hickey, a minority stockholder, to argue a motion attacking the plan and the constitutionality of Section 77-B of the bankruptcy law on the ground that Mr. Hickey, who said that he is not a lawyer, had failed to notify all creditors of the impending argument.

Mr. Hickey pleaded that he be allowed to argue his motion and said that he was willing to rest his case on the argument and that all other parties could be given the opportunity to oppose him at a future date. Several attorneys representing creditor groups opposed, however, and insisted that the rules of the court be followed.

Argument on a motion for permission to intervene, filed by Isidor J. Kresel, counsel for stockholders of Orpheum Theatres Circuit, Inc., also was adjourned. The stockholders of Orpheum which was absorbed by RKO in 1928, claim the proposed plan is unfair to them and charge that officials of RKO through mismanagement and waste, dissipated $20,000,000 of Orpheum assets.

Mr. Kresel's clients further claim that in 1933 RKO transferred the assets of Orpheum, a subsidiary, to Stadium Theatres, Inc., and seek to have that transaction rescinded by the court and the assets considered as part of the assets of RKO.

Marcus Helman, trustee in bankruptcy for Orpheum Theatres, is preparing to file an action in Federal court to have the transfer of Orpheum's assets declared illegal and a complaint alleging mismanagement on the part of the officers and directors of RKO.

Monogram Closes Seven Franchise Contracts

Rhymed Couplets

A novel feature of "Cyrano de Bergerac," Robert T. Kane's third New World production, will be that a proportion of the dialogue will be in rhymed couplets. The most striking scenes of the Rostand adaptation will be treated this way.

The script of "Cyrano," after three month' work by J. L. Hodson and director Harry d'Arast, is practically completed and the musical score also is complete.

As the picture goes on the floor at Denham, the title role has to be cast. Officially stated is that the choice lies among three stars, one English, one American and one French. The minor roles are for the most part set.

New World's second, "Under the Red Robe," is now well advanced, and Annabella has played several scenes with Raymond Massey (Cardinal Richelieu), who has completed his part.

London Up to Schedule

Marlene Dietrich is scheduled to leave for Hollywood Friday. She finished her part in "Knight without Armour" in time for a preliminary holiday trip to the Continent. Robert Donat still had a series of scenes to do before his next activity, which may be to put on a play in London.

Another London Films production on the verge of completion is the Tim Whelan directed "Troopship," for Erich Pommer. Sebastian Shaw, Flora Robson, and Patricia Hilliard are the names.

Already finished is Victor Saville's "Storm in a Teacup," in which Vivien Leigh is promised as Korda's greatest discovery since Merle Oberon.

Going on the floor is "I Claudius." Josef von Sternberg has been supervising the preliminary work, which included the assembling of an enormous quantity of Roman impedimenta for the "Circus" scenes.

BIP Plans a Big One

The first big production to go on the floor at BIP, Elstree, this year will be "Glamorous Nights," with Mary Ellis cast in her stage role, and Rod La Rocque, Otto Kruger and Barry Mackay also cast. Fritz Wagner is the cameraman for Brian Desmond Hurst, directing.

Herbert Wilcox's "The Fighting Navy", originally titled "The Navy Eternal", has Richard Cromwell and Hazel Terry among the leads.

Walter Mycroft, director of production, is scheduling his new Buddy Rogers picture for the first week in March, and is at present selecting among several stories regarded as suitable for Gertrude Michael, who is also due to arrive at the end of February. "Spring Handicap," an original, and "Marigold," version of a Royalty Theatre success, are going on the floor immediately. "Hunt the Pearls" and "Tiger Boy" are comedies for early production.

"Bulldog Drummond at Bay," with Dorothy Mackaill, John Lodge, Claude Allister and Victor Jory, in his first British film, is nearing completion.

Amateur Stars

About the most original cast, as well as one of the largest ever assembled in a London studio, is at Pinewood just now for Herbert Wilcox's production of "The Gang Show." The shooting schedule is as unusual as the company. Because the cast consists of members of Ralph Reader's once a year musical show, whose everyday jobs are the conventional ones of clerk, tailor, baker, postman and schoolboy, all the work has to be done evenings and weekends, but the enthusiasm of the players carries them, and the studio staff, cheerfully on until midnight and later.

Freeland from Sahara

Thornton Freeland returned to London this month from a trip to the Sahara for shots for the Walter Futter production of "Jericho," with Paul Robeson, which began on September 25th. The main objective of the trip, and explanatory of its length, was to get pictures of the yearly "Salt Caravan," in which 14,000 camels are used. For more than five weeks Freeland, cameraman John Boyle, and their explorer guide, T. A. Glover, roamed with their own caravan of thirty-five camels. They obtained shots of the caravan proper in which the whole landscape, from foreground to horizon, is camel. Someone counted 4,000 in view at one time, and may have missed a few. Henry Wilcoxon is the probable lead. The schedule includes a return to Egypt for location scenes in the neighborhood of Cairo.

Itemized

"Stardust," with Lupe Velez has been completed for National Provincial.

Paramount schedules twenty British productions in 1937, the majority to be made at Pinewood. Michael Arlen's "Cavalier of the Streets" will be one of the first.

Raoul Walsh will direct "The Killer" for Criterion at Worton Hall.

Paul Cavanagh has been signed for Alexander Film Production's "Three Mad Men," from an original story by Dave Bader.

Harold Schuster back, for another Kane picture, after seeing "Wings of the Morning" through Hollywood processing.

Five Scheduled

Criterion Films in London will produce five major productions during 1937 instead of two or three, as heretofore, it was announced this week by Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Marcel Hellman, heads of the company. United Artists will handle the releases throughout the world.

Mr. Fairbanks will be featured in two and possibly three of the pictures, the first of which will be "Thief in the Night," and the second, "High Treason."

New Company

Robert Messulam and Bruce Airlie Gregory, prominent in British film financing, have formed Messulam Pictures in London and have announced "With All My Heart" an adaptation of the Austin Parker play, as their first production. Robert Montgomery is being sought for the lead.

Japan Bars Pictures

"Mary of Scotland" and "Mutiny on the Bounty" have been barred in Japan, the former on the ground that it might be disrespectful to the throne and the latter because it is regarded as too revolutionary for Japanese audiences, it was revealed in Tokyo this week.

A feature of the registration statement was that few of the officers or directors of the company owned any of its securities. In this group were Adolph Zukor, chairman of the Board; Neil F. Agnew, vice president; George L. Bagnall, assistant treasurer; Stephen Callaghan, director; Walter B. Cokell, treasurer; Harvey D. Gibson, director; Duncan C. Harris, director; John W. Hicks, vice president; Harry O. King, director; Fred Mohrhardt, comptroller.

Another group was shown to have no direct holdings in the company but to have some securities beneficially, including Y. F. Freeman, vice president, 1,000 shares of common; H. A. Fortington, director, 1,000 shares of common and 300 of first preferred; A. Conger Goodyear, director, 1,000 shares of common and 300 first preferred; Stanton Griffis, director, 1,000 shares first preferred; John D. Hertz, director, 15 shares first preferred and $21,500 in debentures and 600 shares of common and 8,000 shares of second preferred owned by Lehman Brothers; Jacob H. Karp, assistant secretary, 100 shares of common; Charles A. McCullouch, director, 1,000 shares first preferred and $58,000 of debentures; Maurice Newton, director, 4,518 shares of common and 2,413 1/5 shares of second preferred, and 5,000 shares of common and 5,000 second preferred owned by Hallgarten & Company; E. V. Richards, director, 2,000 shares of common; Atlas Corporation, principal underwriter, 1,516,483 shares first preferred.

Those Holding Securities

Those actually holding Paramount securities were: Norman Collyer, assistant secretary, 300 shares of common and 120 second preferred; Henry Herzbrun, vice president, 209 shares of common and 83 second preferred; Austin C. Keough, vice president and secretary, 59 shares of common and 23 second preferred; Earl I. McClintock, director, 100 shares of second preferred; Frank Meyer, assistant secretary, 10 shares of common, 100 first preferred and four second preferred; Allied Owners Corporation, 25,000 shares first preferred and, beneficially, $2,500,000 of debentures.

The company reported the 100 per cent ownership of 72 subsidiaries, which hold 100 per cent ownership in 16 others, and interest of 50 per cent or more in 13 subsidiaries which hold ownership in 31 companies.

The most important subsidiary is Balaban & Katz, Chicago, in which Paramount has an interest of 92.09 per cent, which company has a 100 per cent ownership in 10 subsidiaries and lesser ownership in three; the 13 subsidiaries, in turn, have three subsidiaries of their own.

The parent company owns 42 exchanges and owns, leases or operates 569 theatres, it was shown. Leases are held on 361 of the houses and managing agreements on 49 others. Of the total number, 372 are in the United States and 178 in Canada.

Columbia Certificates

A statement also was filed by Harry Cohn and others as voting trustees covering voting trust certificates for 5,393 shares of no par value Columbia Pictures Corporation common and the underlying securities. The company filed a statement covering 10,990,432 shares of no par value common.

General Theatres Equipment Corporation filed a statement covering 527,024 shares of capital stock, issued, and 227,081 shares to be registered on notice of issuance, and Grand National Films, Inc. and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation submitted special reports showing chances occurring since regular registration statements.

A statement from Condor Pictures, covering a proposed issue of 999,999 shares of common stock, estimated at $1,227,967, showed that the capital stock of the company has been in the hands of three persons: George H. Hirliman of Culver City, holding 23 per cent; Amadee J. Van Beuren of New York, holding 20 per cent, and Albert H. Lieberman of Philadelphia, who holds 56 per cent. It was disclosed further that B. E. Buckman & Co., Madison, Wis., who will underwrite the new issue, have an option of 372,818 shares of stock at $2.65 per share for 120 days after the effective date of the registration and that there are outstanding warrants for stock, to be taken up between March 1, 1937 and March 1, 1947 at $3.25 per share for the first five years and $5 per share for the remaining period. These warrants are held as follows: A. J. Van Beuren, 45,000 shares; A. H. Lieberman, 30,000; Buckman & Co., 73,930, and M. H. Hoffman of Hollywood, G. A. Hirliman, Frank M. Snell of New York and H. J. Rothman of New York, 65,000 each.

Injunction Reversed

The federal circuit court of appeals in New York has reversed, by a two-to-one decision, a court order granting a temporary injunction against the brokerage firm of Torr & Company in the suit brought by the Securities and Exchange Commission to restrain the firm from alleged violations of the securities act in the sale of stock of the Trans-Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation. The case grew out of an option on 47,000 shares of Trans-Lux stock, acquired by Torr & Company from Ellery W. Mann as owner.

Acquisition in November of 35 shares of Loew's common stock by Arthur M. Loew's holding company was disclosed today in the semi-monthly report of the Securities and Exchange Commission on the transactions of officers and directors in stocks of their corporations. At the close of the month, the holding company held 3,918 shares of Loew common.

Rites Conducted For Boleslawski

Funeral services for Richard Boleslawski, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, who died at his home in Hollywood on Sunday, were held on Tuesday in St. Augustine's Chapel, Culver City. Pallbearers were Basil Rathbone, Robert Montgomery, Gilbert Emery, Al Birmingham, Dr. Serg Bertensson and Marcus Goodrich. Russian memorial services will be held on Sunday.

Mr. Boleslawski, who was 47 years old, died suddenly of a heart attack. He had been in apparently good health and had been active in the studio where he was directing "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney."

The director was born in Warsaw, Poland, and received his education in Odessa. While attending Moscow University in 1906 he became an actor in the Moscow Art Theatre, studying under Stanislawsky. Shortly thereafter he abandoned acting for directing and staging.

He arrived in Hollywood in 1929 and his first assignment was "Treasure Girl" for Pathe. He was an assistant director on "Paris Bound" and "This Thing Called Love." In 1930 he did "The Last of the Lone Wolf" for Columbia. In 1932 he published "Way of a Lancer," the first book of a trilogy dealing with his war experiences.

Following publication of the book he directed "Rasputin and the Empress," for MGM, and for the same company "Storm at Daybreak," "Beauty for Sale," "Men in White," "The Painted Veil," "Clive of India," and "Les Miserables." His latest pictures were "Theodora Goes Wild" and "The Garden of Allah."

Equity Advocates Subsidy of Writers

The subsidization of playwrights by the legitimate theatre is urged upon stage producers by Actors' Equity Association in a leading editorial in the current issue of Equity, monthly publication of the organization.

The editorial cites the employment of writers by motion picture producers as illustrative of the soundness of the idea in solving Hollywood's problem of story material supply. It declares that there is a dearth of good play material being written, that the entire stage industry suffers as a result, and that the only means of insuring a definite supply of play material lies in subsidizing a new school of playwrights for the theatre.

"It is," the editorial observes, "the steady, dependable stream of plays coming from brilliant minds which the theatre must have to survive.

"Hollywood producers," it continues, "are farseeing enough to know they have to have stories, and writers must furnish them.

Equity has been engaged during recent months with the League of New York Theatres and the Dramatists' Guild in an attempt to discover what is wrong with the present day theatre and its lack of popularity with the public and the Equity editorial is regarded as an outgrowth of these discussions.

EARLY ADOPTION OF LOCAL BOARDS URGED

Most Fair Trade Practice Proposals Depend on Boards, Kuykendall Tells Depinet

An appeal to distributing companies by Edward Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to take the initiative in establishing local conciliation boards in cooperation with exhibitors who petition for them, was followed this week by a statement from Abram F. Meyers, general counsel of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, that the members of such boards can be valuable only where their prestige and honesty are so high as to command respect.

In a letter to Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO Radio, acknowledging the company's recent statement of policy on the MPTOA trade practice program, Mr. Kuykendall pointed out that a majority of the exhibitors' 10 proposals can be accomplished effectively only through the operation of the local boards. In this group the MPTOA president included unreasonable clearance, overbuying, unfair competition, non-theatrical competition, designation of Sunday playdates, forcing of shorts and "other local complaints and grievances not involving contract enforcement."

"The MPTOA," Mr. Kuykendall said, "has gone as far as it can to secure the establishment of the boards. It is now up to the distributors to work out each such local board, where one is desired, in cooperation with the leading local theatre owners and the local exhibitor association."

Not a Bargaining Basis

Evincing some disappointment that the distributing companies have accepted the program only in part, Mr. Kuykendall reiterated his statement that the proposals were not conceived as a bargaining basis.

"They were intended," he said, "as moderate, reasonable proposals for the genuine and immediate benefit of all independent exhibitors, not as trading points to be cut down as far as possible by each distributor, nor to create artificial controversy, nor to defeat any legislation."

Reminding the distributors that the responsibility for the failure of the program and the consequences of its failure will be entirely the distributors', the letter continued:

"It is no secret that many exhibitors feel that the distributors will give up little or no commercial advantages without Government intervention to regulate our business by statute. How far the distributor will go to convince the exhibitors that this attitude is without justification obviously is demonstrated by how unyielding the distributor is in responding to exhibitor complaints and proposals."

Subject of March 16th Convention

A review of the operation of trade practice concessions will take place at the annual convention of the MPTOA to be held in Miami March 16th to 18th. Four companies, Paramount, Columbia, Warner Brothers and Republic, have not yet published their acceptance of the program. Of these Paramount and Columbia have been delayed by the absence from the home offices of sales executives and Warner Brothers has indicated that it will not alter its policies.

Members of conciliation boards as proposed by the MPTOA can be valuable "only where their prestige as Government officers or their reputation for honesty and fair dealing are so high as to command respect or admiration," Mr. Myers declared in an article appearing in the current issue of the publication of the Independent Exhibitors, Inc., of New England.

Implying a doubt of the efficacy of the boards as proposed by the MPTOA, Mr. Myers points out that the personnel of the conciliation boards will spell their success or failure. "Conciliators have no authority and cannot render decisions or enforce orders," he said.

Continuing in this vein the article included the statement that "the distributors will have nothing to do with any boards, whether they be arbitration boards, code boards or conciliation boards unless they can control the personnel of such boards, unaffiliated as well as affiliated."

Sympathetic to Conciliation

That Allied is not inherently opposed to the submission of trade disputes to a conciliation board, however, is brought out by Mr. Myers in recalling that the independent organization joined with the MPTOA in 1932 in working out proposals for a national board of appeals and conciliation and an optional license agreement.

Members of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Philadelphia have been informed by the negotiating committee that final details of the agreement pending with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have not yet been ironed out, but that a satisfactory consummation of the arrangement may be expected soon.

Gaumont Continues Film Distribution Through 20th-Fox

Gaumont British will continue to distribute through Twentieth Century-Fox exchanges for the time being, it was disclosed this week following a meeting between Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox and Arthur Lee, American head for GB. At the meeting an agreement was reached whereby GB will be permitted to release "River of Unrest," first of five British International Pictures signed for by the company.

Announcement of the agreement was followed by a statement from Mr. Lee to the American sales force that despite reports to the contrary there are no differences between GB and Twentieth Century-Fox. "We will proceed just as we have for the last two and a half years," he said. Several weeks ago Mr. Kent announced that Twentieth Century-Fox would be unable to handle any pictures for GB other than the 24 originally scheduled for American release.

Mr. Lee's statement to his sales force also contained the promise that before the season is finished they would hear some sensational news—"news of such a nature as to make you glad you stuck by your guns and let the rumors take care of themselves. When the news will come I cannot say right now. But I do know, and I want to assure you of the fact, that you, by your work in the field and your selling of GB product, can hasten the day on which the news will be made known to the motion picture world."

Plans for establishing its own exchange system have not been dropped entirely by GB, it is understood, and it is likely that the company may set up its own national distribution outlet for next season.

A company announcement this week said that plans are under way to increase the number of pictures made by GB in London with many important Hollywood stars.

May Drop Production

by BRUCE ALLAN in London

Isidore Ostrer on his arrival in London from New York this week said that Gaumont is considering giving up production and that a decision will be made before the end of March. He declared that unless much greater revenue is obtained from the American market the company must discontinue big pictures for the international market. He branded the present Quota Act a failure and said that the only way to put the British industry on a sound basis was to compel the American companies to spend part of their British revenue on British films.

Pointing out that Gaumont pioneered in America, the GB executive said that considerable resistance was found, only four or five million dollars having been received in three years. The American companies are getting seven to ten million pounds sterling yearly from England, he said, while England receives only £200,000 annually from America.

He reiterated previous statements that there will be no change in Gaumont control.

MORE SALARIES LISTED BY TREASURY

The United States Government this week continued to make public the salaries paid in 1935 to the leading stars, featured players, directors, writers and executives of the motion picture industry, but the new figures published are in the lower income brackets, ranging from approximately $15,000 to $50,000.

When the Government made public the 1935 salaries in the higher brackets last week, much attention was paid the figures in the press, with no mention of the inroads made into these earnings by state and federal income taxes. Motion Picture Herald pointed out that the higher-bracket salaries are subject to federal and New York or California state taxes averaging 46 per cent of the income, and, in the case of the highest paid stars, as high as 65 per cent. The figures published this week are not subject to such a high percentage of taxation, though it is still an appreciable factor. For example, an income of $15,000 would be taxed approximately $1,280 by the Government, $800 by the State of New York and only $300 by California. A salary of $25,000 would find the federal government taking approximately $3,070, with the New York and California taxes amounting to some $1,500 and $750, respectively.

NEWSPAPER CONDEMNS PUBLISHING SALARIES

The New York Times, this week, in commenting editorially on the Government's publishing of amounts of salaries paid members of corporations during 1935 declares, "It is an invasion of privacy. It foments envy and ill will among neighbors. It satisfies only an idle and malicious curiosity. The Government, in effect, compiles a 'sucker list', a preferred group of prospects for solicitors and promoters of all sorts, high-pressure salesmen, mendicants, racketeers, swindlers, extortionists, blackmailers and kidnappers. In addition to all this, the list is extremely misleading in the impression that it gives the average reader." The newspaper then points out that a great part of the published incomes is subject to high taxes and that net incomes are considerably smaller than the published gross figures.

Following is a list of individuals in the industry whose 1935 salaries were in the $15,000 to $53,000 brackets, according to the federal reports, along with the companies for which they worked:
